Robert of Cricklade, called by Leland and Wood Robertus Canutus, Prior of St. Frideswide, 1141, d. 1166, compiled an abridgment of the Natural History of Pliny the Elder, in nine books, (now in MS. in the British Museum, MS. Reg. 15, c. xiv.,) and some theological treatises. See Bale; Wood; Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 186-187.

Robert of Gloucester, probably a monk of the abbey at Gloucester, and supposed by Selden to have lived in the reign of Edward I., was the author of a rhyming Chronicle (chiefly a metrical version of Geoffrey of Monmouth's Latin Chronicon) of English history from Brutus to about the year A.D. 1300. Of this Chronicle, which consists of more than ten thousand lines, there are MSS. in the Bodleian, the Cottonian, the Harleian, the Herald's College, and other libraries. As already noticed, (see HEARNE, THOMAS, Nos 20, 21,) it was pub at Oxford in 1724 and 1810, and again in 1824, by Bagster, each edit. in 2 vols. 8vo also Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, new ed., 1825, 2 vols. 8vo. Of the edits. of Robert of Gloucester's Chronicle of 1724 and 1810, copies were taken off on l. p., 2 vols. r. 8vo, and on largest p., 2 vols. 4to. Some of the edit. of 1810 have red borders. the same is true respecting Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, edits. 1725 and 1810.

"Of all books I know none so valuable as the Chronicle of Robert of Gloucester for acquiring a knowledge of the old Saxon Tongue, which continued to be spoke till Chaucer undertook to refine (as they term it) the language. He, and not Chaucer, as Dr Fuller and some others would have it, is the genius of the English nation, and he is on that account to be as much respected as ever Ennius himself was among the Romans, and I have good reason to think that he will be so by friends to our antiquities and our old history."—HEARNE

"Old Robert of Gloucester, in the time of King Henry the Third, honoured his country with these his best English rhymes, which I doubt not but some (although most now are of the new cut) will give the reading."—CAMDEN

"This rhyming chronicle is totally destitute of art or imagination. The author has clothed the fables of Geoffrey of Monmouth in rhyme, which have often a more poetical air in Geoffrey's prose. The language is not much more easy or intelligible than that of many of the Norman-Saxon poems quoted in the preceding section. It is full of Saxonisms, which indeed abound, more or less, in every writer before Gower and Chaucer. But this obscurity is perhaps owing to the western dialect in which our monk of Gloucester was educated."—Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed 1840, l. 47-43, (q. v.)

Robert of Hereford, or Robertus Losinga, consecrated to that see 1079, d. 1095, has had attributed to him, on rather slender grounds, several theological, astronomical, and mathematical works. He is chiefly known by his abridgment of the chronicle, or rather canonology, of Marianus Scotus, which chronology was given to the public about 1082.

"There appear to be reasons for doubting if the chronicle now known and printed as that of Marianus Scotus be any thing more than Robert's abridgment."—Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 18-21, (q. v.)

Robert de Melun, a native of England, who taught schools in France—first at Paris and then at Melun—from about 1130 to 1160, Bishop of Hereford, 1163, and d. 1167, is known as an author by his Summa Sententiarum, or Summa Theologicæ, of which portions were printed by Du Boulay. (Balaus Hist. Univ. Paris, vol. i. 585-628;) see, also, Hist. Lit. de Fr., xii. 371, xv. 83; Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 200-202. This author is frequently confounded with Robert Losinga and Robert Foliot, Bishops of Hereford.

Robert Losinga. See ROBERT OF HEREFORD.

Robert le Poule, or Robertus Pullus, flourished 1150, Chancellor of the Church of Rome, perhaps Archdeacon of Rochester, and certainly a distinguished lecturer on the Scriptures at Oxford, was the author of Sententiarum, or Libri Sententiarum, or Sententiæ de Trinitate, (in MS. in Brit. Mus.,) twenty sermons, (in MS. at Lambeth,) and probably a treatise, Super Doctorum Dictis, and two or three other works. Edition: Roberti Pulli Sententiæ, edited by Hugo Mathout, Paris, 1655, fol.

Robert de Retines, flourished 1143, in conjunction with Hermann the Dalmatian, in 1143, translated the Koran from Arabic into Latin, (Basil, 1543, fol.; Tiguri, 1550, fol.,) is supposed by Tanner to be the author of Judicia Jacobi Alkindi Astrologi ex Translatione Roberti Anglici, (MSS. at Oxford,) and may have penned other pieces. Roberts, Barré Charles, 1789-1810, son of Edward Roberts, Esq., Clerk of the Pells, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, was a reviewer in the London Quarterly at the age of 19, and, at the time of his early death, well versed in antiquarian—especially topographical numismatic—lore. His collection of coins (based on the Tyssen collection) was purchased by the Government for the British Museum at the price of £4000. See Dibdin's Reminiscences, 643, (and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1836, ii. 485.) Nichols's Illust. of Lit. v. vi. 252, 254. In 1814 his father (d. 1835, in his 87th year) privately printed a royal 4to volume, London, entitled Letters and Miscellaneous Papers by Barré Charles Roberts, Student of Christ Church, Oxford, with a Memoir of his Life. The volume, which contains notices of Osney Abbey, Boxley Abbey, and of a number of monasteries and churches, biographical sketches of the first thirteen Deans of Christ Church, papers originally pub. in Lon. Quar. Rev. and Gent. Mag. &c., was reviewed by Robert Southey in Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan 1815, 509-519.

Roberts, David, b. 1796, at Stockbridge, Edinburgh, was apprenticed as a house-painter in his native place, but, coming to London in 1822, he found employment, in conjunction with his friend Stanfield, in painting scenes for Drury-Lane Theatre. Notices of his subsequent triumphs and of his great pictures will be found in Men of the Time, London, 1852-62, in Knight's English Cyclopædia, v., 1857, 114, and in the Lon. Athenæum, in its accounts of the Exhibitions at the Royal Academy. We have to do only with the books with which his name is connected; and of these the following are the principal: 1. Picturesque Views in Spain and Morocco, Lon., 1835-38, 84 engravings, proofs, £6 6s.; India proofs, £10 10s. Originally pub. as illustrations to The Landscape Annual, vols. vi., vii., viii., ix., 1835-38, with Descriptive Letter-press by Thomas Roscoe: also called The Tourist in Spain, each vol., p. 8vo. £1 1s.; 1 p., £2 12s. 6d. These have been re-engraved in France, Germany, and Spain. Part of them are known as Roberts's Picturesque Sketches in Spain; comprising 26 lithographic engravings, mounted on card-board, 1837, £10 10s. 2. Views in the Holy Land, Egypt, Nubia, Arabia, &c., 20 Pts. imp. fol., ea. 21s.; proofs, 31s. 6d.; col'd and mounted, 42s. 6d., 1843-46. See Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 624, No. 3. 3. Views in Ancient Egypt and Nubia, 21 Pts. imp. fol., ea. 21s.; proofs, 31s. 6d.; col'd and mounted, 42s. 6d., 1846-48. In 1847, Nos. 2 and 3 (at Alderman Moon's sale the coloured copies were sold, on an average, at £70 each) were issued as a consecutive series, consisting of 253 lithographic plates, (engraved by Louis Haghe), atlas fol., in 20 cloth portfolios, (£45;) sometimes bound in 4 vols., sometimes in 6 vols., under the general title of Views in the Holy Land, Syria, Egypt, Nubia, Arabia, &c., with Historical Descriptions by Rev. Dr. Croly and W. Brooketon. A new edit., reduced from these lithographs to 12 in. by 8½ in., (imp. 8vo,) was issued in fortnightly Parts, at £9 9s. for the whole, (bound together sometimes in 6 vols., sometimes in 3 vols.,) commencing with Dec. 1855, and completed in 1856. See Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 807. n., 808, n. Mr. Roberts was one of the illustrators of Sir E. L. B. Lytton's Pilgrims of the Rhine, and of Lockhart's Ancient Spanish Ballads, (last ed., revised, 1858, 4to.)

To the references above cited we add Blackw. Mag., xl. 552, xlviii 330, 382, i. 346, 347, and Photographie Portraits of Men of Eminence, Pt. 2, July, 1863, and, did our limits permit, we should certainly quote Thackeray's eloquent eulogy upon the "happy painter" who "has visited at least three of the quarters of the globe and brought away likenesses of their cities and people in his portfolio." Robertson, Alexander, of Strowan, 1670?-1749, a Highland Chief, and a devoted adherent to three generations of the Stuarts, was educated at the University of St. Andrews, and retained his love for letters amidst the clang of arms. Some of his papers—his poems little to his credit—were published surreptitiously after his death. 1. Poems on Various Subjects and Occasions, 1751, 8vo. Surreptitiously published by means of a menial servant. See Chambers's and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Em. Scots.

"His part, however, in public affairs was so insignificant that his name would not now be remembered if he had not left a volume of poems, always very stupid, and often very profligate. Robertson, Frederick William, 1816-1853, a native of London, and a son of Capt. Frederick Robertson, of the Royal Artillery, studied for one year at the New Academy, Edinburgh, and subsequently attended the Philosophical Classes of that city, enjoying the private tuition of the Rev. Charles Henry Terrot, now Bishop of Edinburgh. He afterwards matriculated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and four days later received an appointment—not accepted—to the Second Regiment of Dragoon Guards. He graduated B.A. 1841, M.A. 1844; was for about twelve months Curate of St. Maurice and St. Mary Kalendar, Winchester; travelled for some time on the Continent, was married, at Geneva, to Ellen, third daughter of Sir George William Denys, Bart., of Easton Neston, co. Northampton, then enquiry to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, acted for four years (1843-1847) as Curate to the Rev. Archibald Boyd, Incumbent of Christ Church, Cheltenham, officiated for two months in 1847 in place of the Rev. William Hanbury; Rector of St. Ebbs, Oxfordshire, August 15, 1847, became Incumbent of Trinity College, Brighton, and retained this position until his death, August 15, 1853. In 1852 he was chaplain to Philip Salomons, Esq., of Brighton, then High-Sheriff of Sussex. He left a son (Charles Boyd) and a daughter. He attracted large audiences both as a preacher and a lecturer, and his sermons published since his death have had a wide circulation.

Robertson, William, 1705-1783, a native of Dublin, educated at the University of Glasgow, held several livings in Ireland, but declined further preferment, and in 1764 resigned his benefices, in consequence, it would appear, of Anti-Trinitarian opinions. Robertson, William, D.D., 1721-1793, a native of Borthwick, county of Mid-Lothian, Scotland, where his father, Rev. William Robertson, was minister; after a preparatory course at the school of Dalkeith, was placed, when only twelve years of age, at the University of Edinburgh, where he greatly distinguished himself by the extent of his studies and the intensity of his application. In 1741 he was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh to preach; in 1743 was appointed minister of Gladsmuir, and, upon an income of £100 per annum, supported himself and educated all of his brothers and sisters; in 1751 he married his cousin, Mary Nesbit, and soon afterwards became a member of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, where for thirty years he was the controlling spirit. In January, 1755, he gave to the world his only published sermon,—The Situation of the World at the Time of Christ's Appearance, &c.,—and in the same year contributed eight articles (six of which are historical) to the (old) Edinburgh Review, (see WORKS of Sir J. Mackintosh, ed. 1854, ii. 467-469.) in 1759, 2 vols. 4to, he published his History of Scotland, which achieved a great and immediate success, in the same year he was nominated Chaplain of Stirling Castle, in 1761 one of the King's Chaplains-in-Ordinary for Scotland, and in 1762 was elected Principal of the University of Edinburgh, the duties of which office he discharged with great reputation for thirty years, in 1764 he was made Historiographer to his Majesty for Scotland, with a salary of £200 per annum, the appointment having been preceded two years earlier by a proposition from George III. that he should undertake a History of England under the advantages of access to state papers and the receipt of a liberal support. In 1769 he extended his reputation by his History of the Reign of Charles V., 3 vols. 4to, which was received with general applause; in 1777 he gave to the world another successful work, The History of America, Books I.-VIII., 2 vols. 4to, which was followed in 1788 by Additions and Corrections to the former Editions of Dr. Robertson's History of America, 8vo, and in 1796 by Books IX. and X., 8vo, published under the eye of, but without any alterations by, the author's son, in 1791 he published the results of an investigation suggested by Major James Rennell's (q. v., No. 3) Memoir of a Map of Hindoostan, viz.: An Historical Disquisition concerning the Knowledge which the Ancients had of India, &c., 4to, a treatise too little known to the present generation of geographers and travellers. In the autumn of the same year his health began to fail, and a jaundice, proceeding from an affection of the liver, resulted in a state of debility which was closed by his death on the 11th of June, 1793. We should not omit to mention that from 1759 until his death he occupied, in conjunction with Dr. John Erskine, the pulpit of the Old Grey-Friars Church, which his father had filled before him; and about this date (1759) he received overtures to enter the Church of England, where, it is believed, his passage to the Episcopal bench would have been sure and rapid. A month or two previous to his decease he was removed to Grango House, near Edinlurgh, where his friend Dugald Stewart enjoyed those visits which, fortunately for the world, led to the composition of that charming memoir of the Principal which has been so often praised and so seldom equalled. His remains were followed to their resting-place in Grey-Friars Church-yard by a large concourse of the most illustrious magnates of the kingdom, the famous professors of the ancient University, the magistrates of the city, the chiefs of the learned professions, and by many private citizens,—all anxious to testify their respect to the memory of one whose intellectual productions cast so bright a lustre on the record of Scottish letters. In that sorrowing assembly there was a youthful mourner of fifteen years, whose love of knowledge had been stimulated by the seal and directed by the judgment of the relative whom Scotland that day lamented,—a youth who, after serving his country in its highest civil offices, and earning a world-wide celebrity by his contributions to science, classics, and popular letters, occupies at this day, nearly threescore years and ten since he followed his preceptor to the tomb, (we write in 1860,) the foremost place among his contemporaries. Lord Brougham's mother, Eleanor Syme, eldest daughter of the Rev. Dr. James Syme, was the daughter of Dr. Robertson's sister. How affectionately, how effectively and eloquently, his lordship has paid the debt due to the memory of his eminent relative, is well known to the many readers of the biographical sketch in the Lives of the Men of Letters of the Time of George III. Dr. Robertson left three sons and two daughters. The eldest son, Lord William Robertson, we are assured, was only prevented by his duties as a member of the legal profession from equaling his father's literary distinction, and his two younger sons both rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel in the British army. The Principal's eldest daughter, married to Mr. Patrick Brydone, was the mother-in-law of the Earl of Minto, and the grandmother of Lady Russell, wife of Lord John Russell, the late Premier. Dr. Robertson's youngest daughter became the wife of John Russell, Esq., Clerk to the Signet.

Stewart's account of the Life and Writings of Robertson, originally read in 1796 at different meetings of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and destined for a place in its Transactions, was published with an Appendix in an 8vo volume in 1801, and again in 1802, and is prefixed to almost all of the collective editions of Robertson's works. It was last pub. together with the Memoirs of Reid and Smith, in the 10th vol. (1857) of Sir Wm Hamilton's Collected Works of Dugald Stewart. (See Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1858, 407.) It was reviewed by Dr. Thomas Brown in Edin. Rev., ii. 229-249, (see STEWART, DUGALD, Nos. 4, 5,) and notices of it will be found in the Memoirs of the Life of Sir S. Romilly, (see, also, Gent. Mag., Feb. 1841, 130,) in the Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, vol. i. chap. viii., and in Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., in Gent. Mag., Feb. 1834, 143.

Of Lord Brougham's Life of Robertson opinions will be found in the vols. referred to in our notice (p. 254, supra) of his lordship's Lives of the Men of Letters and Eloquence who flourished in the Time of George III. See, also, N. Amer. Review, Oct. 1845, 383-421, (by W. B. O. Peabody.) We have now to consider:

I. ROBERTSON THE MAN.

II. ROBERTSON'S WORKS.

III. ROBERTSON'S CHARACTERISTICS AS A HISTORIAN.

I. ROBERTSON THE MAN.

"The history of the author is the history of the individual, excepting as regards his private life and his personal habits. These were in the most perfect degree dignified and pure. Without any thing of harshness or fanaticism, he was rationally pious and blamelessly moral. His conduct, both as a Christian minister, as a member of society, as a relation, and as a friend, was wholly without a stain. His affections were warm, they were ever under control, and therefore equal and steady. . . . His conversation was cheerful, and it was varied. Vast information, copious anecdote, perfect appropriateness of illustration,—narration or description wholly free from pedantry or stiffness, but as felicitous and as striking as might be expected from such a master,—great liveliness, and often wit, and often humour, with a full disposition to enjoy the merriment of the hour, but in the most scrupulous absence of every thing like coarseness of any description,— these formed the staples of his Talk. . . . His very decided opinions on all subjects of public interest, civil and religious, never interrupted his friendly and familiar intercourse with those who held different principles. . . . His manner was not graceful in little matters, though his demeanour was dignified on the whole."—LORD BROUGHAM, Lives of Men of Letters, &c., ed. 1855, 280, 281, 282, 283. See, also, 206.

Boswell (see Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 611, 700) seems to have been unable to discover the wit or wisdom of the Principal's conversation; but Boswell's great Dominie shut out all others from his vision. Dugald Stewart's testimony confirms that of Lord Brougham.

"In point of stature," remarks Stewart, "he was rather above the middle size, and his form, though it did not convey the idea of much activity, announced vigour of body and a healthful constitution. His features were regular and manly, and his eye spoke at once good sense and good humour. He appeared to greatest advantage in his complete clerical dress, and was more remarkable for gravity and dignity in discharging the functions of his public stations than for ease and grace in private society."—Account, &c.

"He enjoyed the bounties of Providence without running into riot, was temperate without austerity, condescending and affable without meanness, and in expense neither sordid nor prodigal. He could feel an injury, and yet bridle his passion; was grave, not sullen, steady, not obstinate, friendly, not officious, prudent and cautious, not timid."—DR. JOHN ERSKINE, D.D., Robertson's colleague

"Principal Robertson and his family were very intimate with the family of my father. . . . He was a pleasant-looking old man, with an eye of great vivacity and intelligence, a large, projecting chin, a small hearing-trumpet fastened by a black ribbon to a button-hole of his coat, and a rather large wig, powdered and curled. He struck us boys, even from the side-table, as being evidently fond of a good dinner, at which he sat with his chin near his plate, intent upon the real business of the occasion. This appearance, however, must have been produced partly by his deafness, because, when his eye told him that there was something interesting, it was delightful to observe the animation with which he instantly applied his trumpet, when, having caught the scent, he followed it up, and was the leader of the pack."—LORD COCKBURN, Memoirs of his Time.

II. ROBERTSON'S WORKS.

1. THE SITUATION OF THE WORLD AT THE TIME OF CHRIST'S APPEARANCE, AND ITS CONNECTION WITH THE SUCCESS OF HIS RELIGION CONSIDERED. A Sermon preached before the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge, January 6, 1755, Edin., 1755, 8vo, 3d ed., 1759, 8vo, 6th ed., 1791, 8vo. Repub. in COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF ROBERTSON'S WORKS, (q v., infra.) It was reviewed in Edin. Rev., 1755, by Dr. John Jardine.

"This sermon, the only one he ever published, has long been ranked, in both parts of the Island, among the best models of pulpit eloquence in our language. It has undergone five editions, and is well known in some parts of the continent in the German translation of Mr. Ebeling."—DUGALD STEWART, Account, &c.

"The subject of the sermon is one peculiarly suited to his habits of inquiry. . . . The merits of this piece, as a sermon, are very great, and it is admirable as an historical composition in that department which Voltaire first extended to all the records of past times. It was written and published before the appearance of the 'Essai sur les Mœurs,' though, as has been already said, detached portions of that work had appeared in a Paris periodical work."—LORD BROUGHAM, Lives, &c.

An eminent critic remarks that the causes assigned by Gibbon, in the 15th chapter of the Decline and Fall, for the diffusion of Christianity, "might all be safely adopted by a Christian writer, with some change in the language and manner," and then proceeds to observe,

"This view of the question may derive confirmation, or at least illustration, from comparing Gibbon's two chapters with Dr. Robertson's Sermon on the State of the World at the Time of the Appearance of Christ. The sound and rational observations of the reverend historian on certain facilities afforded to the diffusion of the gospel by the previous state of the public mind and of public affairs, in the hætas of Gibbon, or of any other author more disposed to sneer than to argue candidly on such subjects, would admit of a perversion nearly similar to that given to the accidental causes which he has enumerated; while several of Gibbon's natural causes, changing the offensive language in which they are conveyed, might fairly have been expounded, as perfectly true and efficient, from any pulpit."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH, Life, I. chap. v., n.

2. THE HISTORY OF SCOTLAND DURING THE REIGNS OF QUEEN MARY AND OF KING JAMES VI. TILL HIS ACCESSION TO THE CROWN OF ENGLAND. WITH A REVIEW OF THE SCOTCH HISTORY PREVIOUS TO THAT PERIOD, AND AN APPENDIX CONTAINING ORIGINAL PAPERS. Lon., 1758-59, (in most copies of 1st ed. both copies are dated 1759,) 2 vols. 4to; 2d ed., 1760, 2 vols. 4to; 3d ed., 1761, 2 vols. 4to; 4th ed., 1761, 2 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1762, 2 vols. 4to; 6th (styled 5th) ed., 1769, 2 vols. 8vo; 7th (styled 6th) ed., 1771, 2 vols. 4to; 11th ed., with Addits. and Corrects., 1787, 2 vols. 8vo; Addits. and Corrects. pub. separately, 1787, 4to and 8vo.

"I have finished a very careful revise of all my works, and have given them the last polish they will receive from my hand. I have made some additions to each of them, and in the History of Scotland pretty considerable ones. I have desired Mr Strahan to send you a copy of them uniformly bound, and hope you will accept of them, as a memorial of my esteem and affection."—Dr. Robertson to Edward Gibbon, Feb. 27, 1788. Gibbon's Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 880.

"The fourteenth edition of your 'Scotland' will be published in the course of the winter, during which it is our intention to advertise all your works strongly in all the papers. And we have the satisfaction of informing you that, if we may judge by the sale of your writings, your literary reputation is daily increasing."—Andrew Strahan to Dr. Robertson, London, 19th Nov. 1792. Stewart's Account, &c.

15th ed., 1794, 2 vols. 8vo; 16th (styled 15th) ed., 1797, 3 vols. 12mo; 17th ed., with Corrects. and Addits., and a Life by Dugald Stewart, 1806, 3 vols. 8vo, (see Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 280); again, 1809, 3 vols. 8vo; and later edits. An edition was pub. at Dublin, 1793, 3 vols. 8vo; one at Phila., 1811, 2 vols. 8vo, another, recently, by Cadell, London, 2 vols. 8vo; another,—Chambers's People's edition,—1840, r. 8vo; and 2 edits., each including the Disquisition on India, were lately pub. in New York, in 8vo, (Harpers, and Derby & Jackson.) See, also, COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF ROBERTSON'S WORKS. Robertson sold the copyright of his History of Scotland to Andrew Millar for £600: see his letter to Dr. John Jardine; HENRY, ROBERT, D.D., supra, p. 826, col. 1: it proved a good bargain for the purchaser. Of course the author and publisher of the History of Scotland, and the friends of both, rejoiced together over the astonishing success of the new candidate for public favour:

"I most sincerely wish you joy of your success," writes Mr. Strahan to Robertson. "In truth," he continues, "to acquire such a flood of approbation, writing on a subject in itself so unpopular in this country, is neither a common nor a contemptible conquest."

"The rapidity of its success," replies Robertson, "has not surprised any man more than the author of it. . . However, since it has so far outgone my hopes, I enjoy it. I have flattered nobody in order to obtain it, and I have not spared to speak truth of all factions and sects."—Stewart's Account, &c.

"It is wrote in an elegant, agreeable, and interesting manner, and far exceeding, I shall venture to say, any performance of that kind that has appeared in English."—David Hume to the Comtesse de Boufflers.

"I have not heard of one," writes David Hume, "who does not praise it warmly. . . I must fatigue your ears, as much as ours are in this place [London] by endless and repeated and noisy praises of the History of Scotland. . . Mallet told me that Lord Mansfield is at a loss whether he shall most esteem the matter or the style. Elliot told me that, being in company with George Grenville, that gentleman was speaking loud in the same key. . . Lord Lyttelton seems to think that since the time of St. Paul there scarce has been a better writer than Dr. Robertson. Mr. Walpole triumphs in the success of his favourites the Scotch," &c.—David Hume to Robertson, 1759. See, also, Hume's Hist. of Eng., chap. xvi., notes.

But Elliot, Lyttelton, and Walpole shall speak for themselves:

"David Hume so far indulged my impatience as to allow me to carry to the country during the holidays the loose sheets which he happened to have by him. In that condition I read it quite through with the greatest satisfaction, and in much less time than I ever employed on any portion of history of the same length. . . Your work will certainly be ranked in the highest historical class, and, for my own part, I think it, besides, a composition of uncommon genius and eloquence."—Sir Gilbert Elliot to Dr. Robertson, Jan. 20th, 1759.

"I think that the historian of Mary, Queen of Scots, cannot fail to do justice to any great subject. . . Go on, dear sir, to enrich the English language with more traits of modern history."—Lord Lyttelton to Dr. Robertson, 1769.

"Having finished the first volume, and made a little progress in the second, I cannot stay till I have finished the latter to tell you how exceedingly I admire the work. In short, sir, I don't know where or what history is written with more excellences, and when I say this, you may be sure I do not forget your impartiality."—Horace Walpole to Dr. Robertson, Feb. 1759.

In a letter to Robertson, written a few weeks later, (4th March, 1759,) Horace intimates that his correspondent

"had not only written what all the world now allows the best modern history, but that he had written it in the purest English, and with as much seeming knowledge of men and courts as if he had passed all his life in important embassies."

See, also, Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, iii. 200, 202, 210, 211, 236, 284; iv. 155; vii. 81; ix. 361.

Lord Chesterfield declared that it was equal in eloquence and beauty to the History of Livy. We quote a few more opinions:

"I have received and read with great pleasure the new History of Scotland, and will not wait for the judgment of the public to pronounce it a very excellent work."—Bishop Warburton to Mr. Millar, 1759.

"Robertson's History is, I think, extremely well written."—Bishop Warburton to Hurd, Jan. 30, 1759. Letters of a Late Eminent Prelate, Lett. CXXV.

"Upon my word, I was never more entertained in all my life; and, though I read it aloud to a friend and Mrs. Garrick, I finished the three first books at two sittings. I could not help writing to Millar and congratulating him upon his acquisition to his literary treasures."—David Garrick to Dr. Robertson, 1769.

"I am very proud of being instrumental in contributing to the translation [by J. B. Suard, supra] of the valuable work you are going to publish. The excellent work you have published already is a sure sign of the reception your History of Charles V. will meet with in the continent."—Baron d'Holbach to Dr. Robertson, Paris, May 30, 1761.

Alas for the expectations of authors! eight years elapsed before Charles the Fifth was ready for the press.

Among these enthusiastic admirers of the new History of Scotland, Dr. Johnson claimed no place:

"Being solicitous," says Boswell, "for the literary fame of my country, I pressed him for his opinion on the merit of Dr. Robertson's History of Scotland. But, to my surprise, he escaped: 'Sir, I love Robertson, and I won't talk of his book.'"Craker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 191. See, also, 182.

The reader must not fail to peruse, what our limits forbid us to lay before him, the critical estimates of the History of Scotland by Dugald Stewart and Lord Brougham: from the latter we quote a few lines

"The rank of the 'History of Scotland' stands very high indeed among the most eminent of historical compositions. The philosophical spirit which pervades it, the enlarged views of polity in which it abounds, the sober and rational, but bold, speculations with which it is variegated, and the constant references to authorities which accompany it, place it above the works of antiquity, deficient in all these particulars, altogether wanting in some of them. The skilful and striking delineations of individual character which are mingled with the narrative, but never overlay it, and the reference to the histories of other countries which is introduced whenever it became necessary or instructive, forms another high merit in the work. But it is as a history, and a history of Scotland, that its execution must mainly be regarded, and in this it is truly a great performance."—Memoirs of Letters, &c. 251-252.

"By many thought his best work, and certainly one that comes as near the excellence of ancient historical composition as any production of modern times."—Edin. Rev., lvi. 220.

"I think the merit of Robertson consists in a certain even and well-supported tenour of good sense and elegance. There is a formality and demureness in his manner, his elegance has a primness, and his dignity a stiffness, which remind one of the politeness of an old maid of quality standing on all her punctilios of propriety and prudery. These peculiarities are most conspicuous in his introductory book. As we advance, his singular power of interesting narrative prevails over every defect. His reflections are not uncommon. . . During the trial of Dusterhook, my mind was full of Mary, Queen of Scots, in whose history I had just read, for the thousandth time, efforts more successful than those of the Armenian Mary, by a vicious and beautiful wife, to murder a bad husband. As soon as Mary gets into England, Robertson is tempted, by the interest of his story, into constant partiality to her. Her abilities are exaggerated to make her story more romantic. she was a weak girl of elegant accomplishments."—Sir J. Mackintosh's Journal, July 13 and 16, 1811. Lett. i. chap. II.

We have already seen (LAING, MALCOLM, M P, No. 1, p. 1047, supra) that Sir James had been convinced four years before the date of the above entry of the atrocious guilt of the Queen of Scots. Robertson has been blamed, and probably always will be blamed, by the bigots of both parties on the Marian question, for being a bigot to neither party. Who would suppose, to read the strictures on Robertson's alleged injustice to Mary, in Tytler's Historical and Critical Inquiry, 1759, 8vo, Whittaker's Mary Queen of Scots vindicated, 1788, 3 vols. 8vo, Gilbert Stuart's Public Law and Constitutional History of Scotland, 1779, 8vo, his History of the Reformation in Scotland, 1780, 4to, and his History of Scotland, 1792, 2 vols. 4to, that Walpole, Birch, and Lord Chesterfield, and even Hume,—to name no more,—detected a decided partiality to Mary?

But some six or seven years ago, when engaged upon the early sheets of this work, (see BUCHANAN, GOREAU, p. 274,) we declined any expression of opinion on the chief indictment against the Scottish Queen, and we have none to offer on the present occasion. Opinions upon this question, and on other questions discussed in Robertson's History of Scotland, will be found in several of the authorities cited at the conclusion of this article. Nor must we omit to direct the attention of the reader to Histoire de Marie Stuart, par Mignet, Paris, 1852, 2 vols. 8vo; Marie Stuart et le Comte de Bothwell, par L. Wiesener, 1865, 8vo; list in Brunet's Manuel, 5th ed., vi (1865); 1547; Professor Smyth's Lectures on Modern History, (Lect. XXV.) to Carlyle's review of Boswell's Johnson in Fraser's Magazine, vol. v., 1832, (repub. in his Miscellanies), and especially to a dissertation on Mary, Queen of Scots, by a late eminent American critic, (W. B. O. Peabody, D.D.,) in North American Review, Jan. 1832, 144-

177. See, also, (by same writer), N. Amer. Review, Oct. 1845, 407. The conclusion of the critic—that Mary “could not possibly have been accessory to the murder of her husband, in a word, that she was never stained with blood, whatever her subsequent weakness might have been”—is one that we would all be glad to embrace, if it were possible. See, also, Mr. Leing’s testimony to Robertson’s faithfulness quoted under ROBERTSON’S CHARACTERISTICS AS A HISTORIAN, (infra.)

With Supplement, 1856: see PRESCOTT, WILLIAM HICKLING, LL D. We have already referred to the translation into French by J. B. Suard, (see Baron d’Holbach’s letter to Robertson, supra) a new edit. of this version was pub at Brussels in 1842, 4 Nos. 8vo. See DUNLOP, JOHN, No. 3, WATSON, ROBERT. For the History of Scotland, as already stated, £600 was paid; but for the History of the Reign of Charles V. the now famous historian received nearly eight times that sum. The work was received with enthusiasm on both sides of the Channel,—we are proud to add, on both sides of the Atlantic. We have seen that it was republished in Philadelphia the year after its first appearance.

“Robertson received four thousand and five hundred pounds for the History of Charles V., and it is no disrespect to the memory of Robertson to say that the History of Charles is both a less valuable and a less amusing book than the Lives of the Poets.”—LORD MACAULAY Life of Johnson, in Encyc. Brit. 8th ed.

“Il y a quatre jours que j’ai reçu le beau présent dont vous m’avez honoré,” writes a distinguished French admirer. “Je le lis malgré les fluxions horribles qui me font craindre de perdre entièrement les yeux. Il me fait oublier tous mes maux. C’est à vous et à M. Hume qu’il appartient d’écrire l’Histoire. Vous êtes éloquent, savant et impartial. Je me joins à l’Europe pour vous estimer.”—VOLTAIRE to Robertson, Château de Ferney, 26th Feb. 1770.

“Robertson is your Livy, his Charles V. is written with truth.”—VOLTAIRE Martin Sherlock’s Letters from an English Traveller, 1780, 4to.

The eulogy of the Empress of Russia we hope to find room for on a future page. The ingenious Horace Walpole was not behindhand in his tribute. After perusing the first volume he despatched a most eulogistic letter to the author, concluding with a protestation which has not failed to excite some amusement since some other letters of the great epistolizer were given to the world. It may indeed be said with some justice that Horace’s praises refer rather to the History of Scotland than to the first volume of the new work, the merits of which he had as yet but little time to test. Certain it is that of the latter he subsequently expressed any thing but a flattering opinion. He complains that the historian “took every thing on trust, and, when he compiled his Charles V., was in utter ignorance of German and Spanish historians.”

Again:—Robertson’s reading is not extensive: he only reads what may conduce to the purpose in hand. His introduction to the History of Charles the Fifth abounds with gross mistakes. In mentioning the little intercourse among nations in the middle ages, he says a Prior of Cluny expresses his apprehension of a journey to St. Maur. He supposes the Prior’s simplicity a standard of the mode of thinking of the time. In many other instances he has mistaken exceptions for rules.

“Lo, there is just appeared a truly classic work, a history, not majestic like Livy, nor compressed like Tacitus, not stamped with character like Clarendon; perhaps not so deep as Robertson’s ‘Scotland,’ but a thousand degrees above his ‘Charles.’

This book is Mr. Gibbon’s ‘History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.’” &c.—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, See, also, Walpole’s Strictures on Robertson’s Charles V., America and India, (infra.)

We continue quotations:

“Robertson, if he had applied to Monsieur Gerard of Brussels, keeper of the archives, and many other persons in the Austrian Netherlands, might have procured documents and information which would have rendered the History of Italy something more than a bare splendid relation of facts already known to every common historical reader.”—Thickness’s Journey through the Austrian Netherlands, iii. 53.

“The reader must beware of following Robertson’s romance,—his so-called History of Charles the Fifth . . . Robertson, the most inaccurate of all modern historians, with, perhaps, the single exception of Hume.”—Europe during the Middle Ages. Lardner’s Cyc. i. 278, 280.

The last three quotations are taken from the Gentleman’s Magazine, (see 1836, ii. 19; 1846, i. 227, n., 1847, ii. 3–4, n.) and we shall have occasion to borrow from the same authority some unfavourable opinions on the author’s History of America, (infra.)

“See, also,” says the same censor, “Matland’s Dark Ages for remarks on Robertson’s Charles the Fifth, pp. 10, 13, 25, 52, No. 1 to No. 4, where he shows ‘the extreme carelessness with which Robertson quotes authorities,’ and in the Preface, p. v, he is placed with Jortin among ‘very miserable second-hand writers.’”—1847, ii. 4, n.

The critic (Gent Mag., ut supra) also refers for remarks on Robertson to the Life of William Taylor of Norwich, ii. 169–171, and Prof Smyth’s Lects. on the French Revolution, vol. iii. 405.

“I got yesterday from Strahan,” writes one of Robertson’s most distinguished correspondents, “about thirty sheets of your history to be sent over to Suard. . . . To say only that they are very well written is by far too faint an expression, and much inferior to the sentiments I feel they are composed with nobleness, with dignity, with elegance, and with judgment to which there are few equals. They even excel, and I think, in a sensible degree, your History of Scotland. I propose to myself great pleasure in being the only man in England during some months who will be in the situation of doing you justice, after which you may certainly expect that my voice will be drowned in that of the public.”—DAVID HUME, 1769.

For Gibbon’s commendations,—they are unqualified,—see his Decline and Fall, chaps. xiii., n., xxxi., n., xlix., n., lviii., n., lxi., n. See, also, his Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 373.

“The historian of Charles the Fifth possesses so many excellencies that it is almost sacrilegious to detract from his merit; he relates the councils, as well as the wars, of nations with all the vehemence of Demosthenes and the rapid eloquence of a Ciceronian philippic. His style is glowing and animated in a high degree.”—DR. KNOX.

“Robertson’s State of Europe in his ‘Charles the Fifth’ is another of my great favourites; it contains an epitome of information. Such works are the railroads to learning.”—LORD BYRON Columbus of Blessington’s Conversations with Byron, Part 1.

“Finished the 1st vol of Robertson’s Charles the Fifth, obeying the references to proofs and illustrations. I am confounded at the immense researches which furnished material for this preliminary volume.”—Green’s Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 18, 19.

The first volume of his Charles V. may justly be regarded as the greatest step which the human mind had yet made in the philosophy of history. Extending his views beyond the admirable survey which Montaigne had given of the rise and decline of the Roman Empire, he aimed at giving a view of the progress of society in modern times.”—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Blackw. Mag., Dec. 1844,—Guzot, and in his Essays, 1854, iii. 81, 83–84.

See, also, by Alison, For. and Col. Rev., April, 1844,—Michelet’s France; and in his Essays, iii. 420.

“The subject of private warfare is treated so exactly and perspicuously by Robertson, that I should only waste the reader’s time by dwelling so long upon it as its extent and importance would otherwise demand. See Hist of Charles V., vol. i, note 21. Few leading passages in the monuments of the middle ages, relative to this subject, have escaped the penetrating eye of that historian, and they are arranged so well as to form a comprehensive treatise in small compass.”—HALLAM: Europe in the Middle Ages, 10th ed., 1853, i. 420, n. 2–4, also, Edin. Rev., vi. 210, (by Hallam).

“In truth, this Dissertation, under the unassuming title of an Introduction to the History of Charles V., may be regarded as an introduction to the History of Modern Europe. It is invaluable, in this respect, to the historical student, and it suggests, in every page, matter of speculation to the politician and the philosopher.”—DUGALD STEWART: Account, &c.

“The prevailing opinion places this work at the head of his writings. . . . But though the same felicitous narrative is in this work always to be found, and though the first book contains the most perfect example of general and philosophical history anywhere to be seen, yet I hesitate greatly in preferring it as an historical composition to either its predecessor or its immediate successor. There are more remarkable beauties of a purely historical kind in both of these, according to my humble judgment. As a whole, as a history of a country for a given period, I am much disposed to place his ‘Scotland’ first; while I consider that the ‘America’ presents particular passages, scènes of narrative excellence, unrivalled by any thing in either of the other works,—perhaps not to be matched, and certainly not exceeded, by any other historical composition of any age.”—LORD BROUGHAM. Lives, &c., 269–280.

“The brilliant success of Voltaire in his truly philosophical work, and of Robertson in his general view of European history, has founded a new and invaluable school of political science, which the great failure of others has not been able to destroy.”—LORD BROUGHAM. Polit. Philos., Part 3, 2d ed., 1849, 193.

“In citing Tacitus and Caesar, Robertson has, with his accustomed sagacity, warned us to be on our guard as to the difference which may be found among different nations of Germany, and at different periods.” (Ch v vol. I, n. 6.)—Ibid., Part 1, 3d ed., 1853, 289, n.

“Dr Robertson, the most diligent of mankind”—Lord Brougham's Contrib. to Edm. Rev., 1856, iii. 318, (q v.)

“He [the law student] must take care thoroughly to master the ‘Preliminary View of the Progress of Society in Europe,’ . . . a very choice and beautiful performance.”—Warren's Law Studies, 2d ed., 1845, 160.

An eminent authority in another profession, Dr. George M. Burrows, commends, as an admirable picture by an eloquent historian, Robertson's description (Charles V., vol ii.) of some of “these extravagances which marked the dawn of the Reformation.” (Commentaries on Insanity, 1828, Part 1; Comment., ii. 38–39.)

Let us again reverse the picture. We have seen that Dr. Johnson gave no obscure intimation of his unfavourable opinion of the History of Scotland; he was still more explicit when Boswell teased him for his opinion of Charles the Fifth, ranking the latter lower than Goldsmith's Roman History, published in the same year. (See GOLDSMITH, OLIVER, p. 691, col. 2.)

“Johnson.—‘I have not read Hume, but, doubtless, Goldsmith's History is better than the verbiage of Robertson or the foppishness of Dalrymple.’ Boswell.—‘Will you not admit the superiority of Robertson, in whose history we find such penetration,—such painting?’ JOHNSON.—‘Sir, you must consider how that penetration and that painting are employed. It is not history, it is imagination. He who describes what he never saw, draws from fancy. Robertson paints minds as Sir Joshua paints faces in a history-piece: he imagines an heroic countenance. You must look upon Robertson's work as romance, and try it by that standard. History it is not. Besides, sir, it is the great excellence of a writer to put into his book as much as his book will hold. Goldsmith has done this in his history. Now, Robertson might have put twice as much into his book. Robertson is like a man who has packed gold in wool: the wool takes up more room than the gold. No, sir, I always thought Robertson would be crushed by his own weight,—would be buried under his own ornaments. Goldsmith tells you shortly all you want to know. Robertson detains you a great deal too long. No man will read Robertson's cumbersome detail a second time; but Goldsmith's plain narrative will please again and again. I would say to Robertson what an old tutor of a college said to one of his pupils: ‘Read over your compositions, and wherever you meet with a passage which you think is particularly fine, strike it out.’”—Boswell's Johnson, anno 1773. See, also, anno 1777.

Gilbert Stuart, who, as we have seen, had criticised the History of Scotland with more vigour than courtesy, was well pleased (see his View of Society in Europe, &c., 1778, 4to) in calling the attention of the public to the alleged errors of the History of the Reign of Charles V. But it is the testimony of a respectable historical student that Robertson's “fame and authority are, on the whole, rather confirmed than weakened by the animadversions of Stuart, for, with great ability and learning, and with great eagerness to find fault, his objections are, after all, but few, and of no decisive importance.”

—Prof Smyth's Lects on Mod. Hist. Lect III. (q v.) and see, also, Lects. I., II., IV., VII., VIII., IX., and XI. for commendations of Robertson's Charles V.

But it is not to be denied that late critics, eminent for the extent to which they have carried researches into the state-paper and private-paper records of the times and the countries delineated on Robertson's ample canvas, allege deficiencies, attributed to the absence of materials, inaccessible or neglected, and misstatements for which ignorance and carelessness are the most charitable excuse. It is sufficient to refer, in addition to those already cited to the same effect, to the comments of Dr. Dunham, in his History of Spain and Portugal, 1832, 5 vols. 12mo, (Lardner's Cab. Cyc.) of Mr. Prescott, (we give all his references—censorious or otherwise—to Charles V.) in Ferd. and Isabella, 11th ed., 1856, i. lxxvii.; iii. 210, 214, 215, 223, 224, 495; Mexico, 23d ed., 1855, i. 232; Philip II., 1856, i., Pref., iv. 328, 356; his edit. of Charles V., 1856, i., Pref., iii., iv., (see, also, iii. 328–330.) Dr. Robertson's intended account of the British settlements was suspended “on account of the ferment which then agitated our North American colonies,” and he never completed his design this, we think, is to be regretted. Mr Charles Francis Adams (N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1831, 177) thinks otherwise. But, before the adduction of any adverse opinions, let us see what we have before us in the way of commendation. The veracious and unsophisticated Lord of Strawberry Hill, of course, was among the first to lay his offerings on the altar. How would the good Principal have felt if he could have read Horace's letter to Mason, describing the visit he had the honour of receiving from the historian, then in search of materials for the reigns of King William and Queen Anne?

“I once wished he should write the History of King William, but his ‘Charles V.’ and his ‘America’ have opened my eyes, and the times have shut his. I do not care a straw what he writes about the Church's wet-nurse, Goody Anne, but no Scot is worthy of being the historian of William, but Dr. Watson [But see SOMERVILLE, THOMAS, D.D., No. 1.] I have almost finished the first volume of Dr. Robertson. The materials are well put together, and it is a book that must please anybody to whom the matter is new. In short, it is not all so, and though the arrangement is good, I see no genius, nor shrewdness, none of that penetration that shone in the ‘History of Scotland’ and totally left him in his ‘Charles V.’ There is a great affection of philosophising, without success. . . . His philosophic solutions are as paltry as possible.”—Horace Walpole to Mann, 1778, and the Countess of Ossory, 1777. Letters, Cunningham's ed., 1861, vi. 445, 451, and vii. 55, 81.

Disraeli does not spare Horace for his unhandsome comments on the Principal. Yet even Disraeli classes Robertson among the historians who “are ignorant of even the sources of knowledge they would give the public.”

We proceed with our quotations

“I have seen enough to convince me that the present publication will support, and, if possible, extend, the fame of the author that the materials are collected with care, and arranged with skill; that the progress of discovery is displayed with learning and perspicuity, that the dangers, the achievements, and the views [vices] of the Spanish adventurers are related with a temperate spirit, and that the most original, perhaps the most curious, portion of human manners is at length rescued from the hands of sophists and declaimers.”—Gibbon to Robertson, Paris, 14th July, 1777. Stewart's Account, &c.

Stewart says that the copy of this letter “found among Dr. Robertson's papers [at supra] corresponds verbatim with that which Mr. Gibbon appears to have retained in his own possession;” but Mr. Stewart here speaks inaccurately, as the reader will discover by referring to Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works, ed. 1837, 283–284.

A greater than Gibbon, or than the subject of Gibbon's eulogy, also wrote a congratulatory letter to the author; and we know not that there is extant a better specimen of the philosophic pen of Edmund Burke:

"Every thing has been done," says the great statesman, "which was so naturally to be expected from the author of the History of Scotland and of the age of Charles the Fifth. I am heartily sorry," continues the author of the Speech on Conciliation with America, "that we are now supplying you with that kind of dignity and concern which is purchased to History at the expense of mankind. . . . Adieu, sir: continue to instruct the world, and, whilst we carry on a poor unequal conflict with the passions and prejudices of our day, perhaps with no better weapons than other passions and prejudices of our own, convey wisdom at our expense to future generations."—Stewart's Account, &c

See, also, Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., Lon. Gent. Mag., 1843, i. 143.

But it is believed that Burke did more than write a commendatory letter to the now thrice-successful historian: the eulogistic review of the History of America in the Annual Register is confidently ascribed to no less a pen.

"We may as well add, in taking our leave of the Doctor Historian, that the account of his America in the Annual Register bears the marks of Burke's Philosophical Criticism. It shows an extent of moral and political views similar to that which his writings usually display. See Bisset's Life of Burke, p. 290, and see Foreign Quarterly Review, No. xvii, pp. 108-110, on the America."—Gent. Mag., 1836, ii. 20. See, also, 1839, i. 336; 1846, i. 227, n., 1847, ii. 3-4, n.

But this critic, already quoted in our notice of Charles V., does not take his "leave of the Doctor Historian" before he has quoted a number of opinions on the merits and demerits of his History of America, viz.:

"Robertson's History, admirable for the sagacity with which it has been compiled, but too much abridged in the part relating to the Toltecks and Aztecks."—HUMBOLDT Researches in America, ii. 248.

"Robertson, in what he calls his History of America, is guilty of such omissions and consequent misrepresentations as to make it certain either that he had not read some of the most important documents to which he refers, or that he did not choose to notice the facts which are to be found there, because they were not in conformity to his own preconceived opinions. The reputation of this author must rest upon his History of Scotland, if that can support it. His other works are miserably deficient."—R. SOUTHAY Hist. of Brazil, i. 639.

But see Robertson's Pref., March 1, 1788, and the Notes in the subsequent edit. of his America, and Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XXI.

"Hume is chargeable with want of industry, and Robertson in a far greater degree,—beyond any other writer of eminence, not even excepting the Abbé Raynal."—R. SOUTHAY Annual Review, iv. 467.

"What Robertson has said of Ant. Solis may be applied to himself. 'I know no author, in any language, whose literary fame has risen so far above his real merits.'"—R. SOUTHAY Omnia, i. 141.

The critic (Gent. Mag., ut supra) also refers to a notice of the History of America in the Foreign Quarterly Review, No. xvii., 108-110, remarking, (Gent. Mag., 1836, ii. 20.) "So much for the fame and merits of Dr. Robertson, to which we may add that his style is artificial and tiresome."

But Charles James Fox was a great purist in language, and he thought "the life of Columbus well written." We presume that it was the History of Charles V. which he thought "very superficial in comparison with Gibbon's History." (Recollections, by S. Rogers, 1859, 24, 31.)

We are assured by Mr. Emerson, on Landon's own authority, that the "History of America was an early favourite" with that learned and nervous writer. (Emerson's English Traits, 1857, 9.)

The author of the Diary of a Lover of Literature (1810, 4to, 20) compares the style of Robertson's History of America with that of Burke's European Settlements in America, (see p. 289, supra), to the disadvantage of the former; but he considers that Robertson's preliminary Book "is executed in a perspicuous, masterly, and pleasing manner." Lord Brougham, as we have seen, (p. 942, supra), considers that Robertson's description of the first discovery of land by Columbus is much to be preferred to Washington Irving's; and Prof. Smyth (see the same page) is not disposed to concede to the latter any other advantage in the story of Columbus than the possession of additional materials.

How far these then unknown sources of information and new ones since discovered have added to our knowledge of the history of the New World, may, to some extent at least, be seen by reference to the following authorities, where it will be observed that the faults of commission or omission of Dr. Robertson—errring from want of or neglect of materials—are pointed out and rectified: Irving's Life and Voyages of Columbus, ed.

1850, iii. 364, 419, (see, also, ii. 280, and Life of W. Irving, ii., 1862, 318, 335;) Prescott's (we give all his references—censorious or otherwise—to Robertson's History of America) Mexico, i., Pref., vi., 37, 103, 320, 333, 336, 348, 365, 376; ii. 64, 96, 112, 203, 204, 222; iii., 304, n., 379, Peru, i., Pref., xii., 17, 338, 423, Ferd. and Isabella, iii. 409. See, also, the quotation from Prescott under ROBERTSON'S CHARACTERISTICS AS A HISTORIAN.

The learned author of The Cloister Life of Charles V., referring to Mr. Prescott's History of Ferdinand and Isabella, remarks,

"The story of Columbus had indeed been told by Robertson with a grace which compensates the defects of a narrative of which the meagreness and inaccuracy are to be ascribed to the want, not of diligence, but materials."—Sir Isaac's Life of Prescott Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xviii. 603, (1859.)

See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1843, 187, 188; Sept. 1847, 317-318, Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1844, 340, n., 341, 344, n.; Lon. Athen., 1843, 973, 1005; N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1847, 370, 371, (by F. Bowen.)

Mr. Prescott prefers the arrangement of Robertson's work to "the slavish adherence to chronology" which embarrasses Herrera and his readers.

"In such a work," he remarks, "we feel the superiority of a plan like that which Robertson has pursued in his 'History of America,' where every subject is allowed to occupy its own independent place, proportioned to its importance, and thus to make a distinct and individual impression on the reader."—Mexico, ii. 65, n.

Mr. Ticknor's verdict is not so favourable.

"Robertson's History of America, published in 1777, is entirely unequal to the claims it makes. Simancas was closed to him, and the admirable collection at the Lonja of Neville was not yet imagined, so that he had not the materials needful for his task besides which, his plan was not only too vast, but, in its separate parts, was ill proportioned and ill adjusted."—Life of Prescott Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 236.

It will be seen by reference to the Proceedings of the Massachusetts Historical Society, 1858-1860, 277-279, that the eminent critic last quoted defends a statement in Dr. Robertson's History of America against an attack in R. A. Wilson's New History of the Conquest of Mexico (See, also, our notice of Prescott's History of Mexico on a preceding page, and Ticknor's Life of Prescott, 1864, 12mo, 8vo, and 4to.) We add to our references Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XVI., Gibbon's Decline and Fall, chap. xxv., notes; Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 257, Bibliotheca Historica of Meuselius; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 473, Chancellor Kent's Course of Reading, ed. 1853, 41, Bancroft's Hist. of U. States, vol. i.; Lon. Athen., 1833 850, (by A. Cunningham.) N. Amer. Rev., vi. 336, (by Abiel Holmes, D.D.) Gibbon's Miscell. Works, i. 257, Edward Everett's Orations, iii. 198, (1859;) and the three following works by Arthur Helps: The Spanish Conquest in America, 1855-61, 4 vols. 8vo, Life of Las Casas, 2d ed., 1868, p. 8vo, Life of Pizarro, 1869, p. 8vo. "Dr. Robertson," remarks Sir James Mackintosh, "has been the subject of much blame for his real or supposed lenity towards the Spanish murderers and tyrants in America."—Mackintosh's Life, i. chap. v.

Dugald Stewart, a warm but discriminating eulogist of the historian, and Lord Brougham, always solicitous for the reputation of his eminent kinsman, find themselves unable to defend the History against this censure. His lordship frankly admits that "This is a great stain upon the work, and it can only be palliated by the excuse already offered, [q. v.,] an excuse by which the stain never can be wiped out."—Lives of Men of Letters, &c., 277. See, also, 260-272.

It will be seen that his lordship coincides with Dugald Stewart's high estimate of the History of America. The latter remarks that in those passages where Robertson describes the "grand features of an unsubdued world"

"He discovers talents as a writer different from any thing that appears in his other publications, a compass and richness of diction the more surprising, that the objects described were so little familiarised to his thoughts, and, in more than one instance, rivaling the majestic eloquence which destined Buffon to be the historian of nature."—Account, &c.

V. AN HISTORICAL DISQUISITION CONCERNING THE KNOWLEDGE WHICH THE ANCIENTS HAD OF INDIA; AND THE PROGRESS OF TRADE WITH THAT COUNTRY PRIOR TO THE DISCOVERY OF THE PASSAGE TO IT BY THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE; WITH AN APPENDIX, Lon., 1791, 4to; Phila., 1792, 8vo; 2d ed., Lon., 1794, 8vo; 1795, 8vo; Phila., 1812, 8vo. Repub. in COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF ROBERTSON'S WORKS, (q. v., supra), and in some editions of his History of Scotland.

The inception of this Disquisition has been already referred to. It should not be forgotten—the Major never forgot—that it was due to Major Rennell's Memoir of a Map of Hindoostan:

"It gives me unfeigned pleasure," writes Rennell, "to have been the instrument of suggesting such a task to you, and I shall reflect with pleasure, during my life, that I shall travel down to posterity with you. . . . After reading your book twice, I may with truth say that I was never more instructed or amused than by the perusal of it."—London, 2d July, 1791. Stewart's Account, &c.

The author of the Decline and Fall, who, as we have seen, (RENNELL, MAJOR JAMES, No. 3, supra), highly valued the Memoir, expected with impatience the publication of the Disquisition:

"I am happy to hear that our respectable friend Dr Robertson is not asleep, and much do I expect from the subject and the pen. I had once a design not totally unconnected with his own, but it is now in far abler hands."—Gibbon to Cadell, Lausanne, April 27, 1791: Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 388

The compliment is a high one: the author himself would have deprecated it:

"While I was engaged in composing the Disquisition," he writes to Gibbon, "it often occurred to me that I was more upon your ground than in any of my former works, and I often wished that I had been so near to you as to profit by your advice and information. Next to that will be the benefit I may derive from your friendly strictures. Be so kind, then, as to mention to me any error or omission you have observed. Every criticism of yours will be instructive."—Lewnel House, Aug 26, 1791: Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 389 See, also, Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 4

After quoting from Robertson's Preface to the Disquisition, Dugald Stewart remarks,

"Such is the account given by himself of the origin and progress of a disquisition begun in the sixty-eighth year of his age, and in twelve months brought to a conclusion; exhibiting, nevertheless, in every part, a diligence in research, a soundness of judgment, and a perspicuity of method not inferior to those which distinguish his other performances."—Account, &c.

"Dr. Robertson's book [on India] amused me pretty well, madam, though very defective from the hiatuses in his materials. It is a genealogy with more than half the middle descents wanting, and thence his ingenious hypothesis of Western invaders importing civilization from the East is not ascertained. Can one be sure a peer is descended from a very ancient peer of the same name, though he cannot prove who a dozen of his grandfathers were? Dr Robertson shone when he wrote the history of his own country, with which he was acquainted. All his other works are collections, tacked together for the purpose; but, as he has not the genius, penetration, sagacity, and art of Mr Gibbon, he cannot melt his materials together and make them elucidate and even improve and produce new discoveries in short, he cannot, like Mr Gibbon, make an original picture with some bits of mosaic."—Horace Walpole to the Countess of Ossory, Nov 23, 1791. Letters, ed 1861, ix, 381

"It is, from its accuracy, its knowledge of the ancient writings, its judicious reasonings and remarks, as well as its admirable composition, quite worthy of a place by the author's former and more celebrated writings, and it proves his great facilities to have continued in their entire vigour to the latest period of his life. . . . Nothing can be more unjust than the notion that this work is so incorrect, or grounded on information so imperfect, as to have been superseded by more full and accurate books since published."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives, &c., 272

III. ROBERTSON'S CHARACTERISTICS AS A HISTORIAN.

If the reader should hastily conclude that this division of our subject has been already exhausted, a glance at our library-table, groaning with "authorities," would undeceive him. But our space, if not our matériel, has indeed been exhausted, and we must omit much that we would gladly cite. And here, when the "general characteristics" of our historian are to be considered, we shall be obliged to exhibit the same conflict of learned critics which has already surprised, perhaps embarrassed, we doubt not after amused, him who may be disposed to "put his trust in princes" and rely upon the authority of great names. Here we have no infallible "centre of unity," no papal throne: it is the Republic of Letters,—the "Republic of Letters," although we shall commence our citations by a few lines from the empress Catherine II. of Russia,—a bad woman, but a great sovereign, and, what is more to the purpose just now, an intelligent critic.

"Your History of America," writes Dr Rogerson to the author, "was received and perused by her Imperial Majesty with singular marks of appreciation. All your historical productions have been ever favourite parts of her reading. Not long ago, doing me the honour to converse with me upon historical composition, she mentioned you with particular distinction, and with much admiration of that sagacity and discernment displayed by you in painting the human mind and character, as diversified by the various causes that operated upon it in those eras and states of society which your subject led you to treat. She assigned you the place of first model in that species of composition.

"As to the History of Charles V., she was pleased to add, C'est le compagnon constant de tous mes voyages, je ne me l'asse jamais à le lire, et particulièrement le premier volume."

"She then presented a very handsome gold enamelled snuff-box, richly set with diamonds, ordering me to transmit it to you, and to desire your acceptance of it as a mark of her esteem, observing that a person whose labours had afforded her so much satisfaction merited some attention from her."—Stewart's Account, &c.

"In regard to style," remarks another intelligent foreign critic, "few writers of any country can sustain a comparison with Robertson, his expressions are select and elegant, but always clear and unlaboured. But he is very inferior in respect to other matters of far greater importance,—the research and import of his histories. The English themselves are now pretty well convinced that he is a careless, superficial, and blundering historian, although they study his works, and are right in doing so, as models of pure composition, extremely deserving of attention during the present declining state of English style. [Written in 1812.] To speak from my own feelings, I think Robertson, although upon the whole a beautiful writer, is too fond both of verbosity and of antithesis. The ambition of fine writing, and the desire to treat matters in an elaborate and oratorical manner, appear to me to be extremely erroneous and out of place in a writer of history. If historical composition is to be considered merely as a display of writing, no modern author need ever flatter himself with the least hope, I do not say of equalling, but of approaching, the great historians of antiquity. Cuxe, although master of a good and classic style, resembles Robertson in no respect so much as in the superficiality of his researches."—FRED VON SCHLEGEL: Lects on the Hist of Lit., Lect XIV., English trans.

"There is a style which daily gains ground amongst us, which I should be sorry to see further advanced by a writer of your just reputation. The tendency of the mode to which I allude is, to establish two very different idioms amongst us and to introduce a marked distinction between the English that is written and the English that is spoken. This practice, if grown a little more general, would confirm this distemper,—such I must think it—in our language, and perhaps render it incurable. From this feigned manner, or falsetto, as I think the musicians call something of the same sort in singing, no one modern historian, Robertson only excepted, is perfectly free."—Edmund Burke to Arthur Murphy on his trans of Tacitus. Stewart's Account, &c.

"The public has been hitherto indebted for its knowledge of the reign of Charles the Fifth to Robertson,—a writer who, combining a truly philosophical spirit with an acute perception of character, is recommended, moreover, by a classic elegance of style which has justly given him a pre-eminence among the historians of the Great Emperor."—Prescott's Philip II., 1856, I, 366, n. (q v)

"The domestic history of Charles V.—a history which still remains to be written. But who will attempt a pendant to the delineations of Robertson?"—Prescott: Ferd. and Is., 11th ed., 1856, iii, 495.

"Robertson's style," Mr Prescott remarked, was that of a schoolmistress. He thought him greatly wanting in narrative power, and in the faculty of picturesque description. He instanced the bald and commonplace account of the battle of Pavia as a specimen of Robertson's inability to do justice to a great and splendid subject. At the same time, he did justice to that historian's eminent qualities of another kind,—his clearness, penetration, and philosophic tone. He attributed his defects of style to his age rather than to any defect in himself. The art of writing history had not in English then attained its present remarkable development. Scott and the other novelists have since Robertson's time, initiated the historians into the secret of dramatic and animated narrative and vivid graphic description."—Recollections of Prescott, by his former Secretary Prescott Memorial, 1869, pp 21, 22

"Do we believe that Erasmus and Fracastorius wrote Latin as well as Dr Robertson and Sir Walter Scott wrote English? And are there not in the Dissertation on India, the last of Dr Robertson's Works, in Waverley, in Marmon, Scottisms at which a London apprentice would laugh? . . . Not one Londoner in ten thousand can lay down the rules for the proper use of will and shall. Yet not one Londoner in a million ever misplaces his will and shall. Dr. Robertson could, undoubtedly, have written a luminous dissertation on the use of these words. Yet, even in his latest work, he sometimes misplaced them ludicrously."—LORD MACAULAY: Crit and Hist Essays, ed 1854, ii, 250; iii, 373; but see SMITH, ADAM, LL.D., conclusion of the article, (quotation from Sir J Mackintosh)

"It remains to speak of Robertson's style. No one ever doubted of its great excellence; but it has sometimes been objected to as less idiomatic and more laboured than is consistent with the perfection of composition. The want of purely idiomatic expressions is the almost unavoidable consequence of provincial education and habits. Many forms of speech, which are peculiarly English, are almost entirely unknown in the remote parts of the kingdom; many, which are perfectly pure and classical, a person living in Scotland would fear to use, as doubting their correctness. That Robertson, however, had carefully studied the best writers, with a view to acquire genuine Anglicism, cannot be doubted."—LORD BROUGHAM Lives, &c., 272, 273

"In concluding this general review of Dr Robertson's publications, our attention is naturally led, in the first place, to the extent and variety of his historical researches. In this respect, he has certainly not been surpassed by any writer of the present times, nor would it perhaps be easy to name another who has united to so luminous an arrangement of his materials, and such masterly skill in adorning them, an equal degree of industry and exactness in tracing them to their original sources. After a minute examination of the most disputed passages of his first performance, a late author [Mr Laing] has ventured to pronounce him 'the most faithful of historians,' and I have no doubt that this honourable appellation will be sanctioned by those who shall examine his other works with the same acuteness, accuracy, and candour.

"In the art of narration, too, which next to correctness in the statement of facts is the most essential qualification of an historian, Dr Robertson's skill is pre-eminent. Perhaps I might venture to say that in this art his chief and characteristic excellence as an historian consists. The general strain of his composition is flowing, equal, and majestic, harmonious beyond that of most English writers, yet seldom deviating, in quest of harmony, into inversion, redundancy, or affectation. Perhaps on the whole it will be found that, of all his performances, Charles V is that which unites the various requisites of good writing in the highest degree. The style is more natural and flowing than that of the History of Scotland, while, at the same time, idiomatical phrases are introduced with no sparing and timid a hand, that it is easy to perceive the author's attention to correctness was not sensibly diminished. In the History of America, although it contains many passages equal, if not superior, to any thing else in his writings, the composition does not seem to me to be so uniformly polished as that of his former works, nor does it always possess in the same degree the recommendations of conciseness and simplicity."—DUGALD STEWART Account, &c.

"In the evening read Stewart's Life of Robertson, which has excited in me a new interest in his works. Stewart's account of his style is just and good. There always appeared to me some degree of heaviness and want of raciness in it, and Stewart has assigned the cause very satisfactorily to my mind."—Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit. Gent Mag., 1834, i. 143

Nor must we omit to quote a few lines from the criticism of Stewart's eminent colleague in the department of Moral Philosophy.

"The histories of Robertson abound in the finest descriptions, the most pleasing delineations of character, the most dignified and judicious mixture of reflections, and more especially they are distinguished by a style of narration at once manly, copious, and easy. But all these descriptions, delineations, reflections, and even this narrative itself, are too general for practical use and application. The politician and political economist will search these writings in vain for the accurate details of fact which they have a right to expect from one who investigates the subjects of particular men and nations. . . In plain terms, Dr Robertson appears to have studied grace and dignity more than usefulness. He has chosen those features of every figure which he could best paint, rather than those which were most worthy of the pencil. The charms of Robertson's style, and the full flow of his narration, which is always sufficiently minute for ordinary readers, will render his works immortal in the hands of the bulk of mankind. But the scientific reader requires something more than periods which fill his ear, and general statements which gratify by amusing, he even requires more than a general text-book,—a happy arrangement of intricate subjects, which may enable him to pursue them in their details. . . When we repair to the works of Robertson for the purpose of finding facts, we are instantly carried away by the stream of his narrative, and forget the purpose of our errand to the fountain. As soon as we can stop ourselves, we discover that our search has been vain, and that we must apply to those sources from which he drew and culled his supplies."—DR THOMAS BROWN Edin Rev., April, 1803, 240, 241

"Inferior probably to Mr Gibbon in the vigour of his powers, unequal to him perhaps in comprehension of intellect and variety of knowledge, the Scottish historian has far surpassed him in simplicity and perspicuity of narrative, in picturesque and pathetic description, in the sober use of figurative language, and in the delicate perception of that scarcely discernible boundary which separates ornament from exuberance and elegance from affectation. He adorns more chastely in addressing the imagination, he narrates more clearly for the understanding, and he describes more feelingly for the heart. The defects of Dr Robertson arise from a less vigorous intellect; the faults of Mr Gibbon, from a less pure taste. If Mr Gibbon be the greater man, Dr Robertson is the better writer."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH's Lon Month. Review.

"Dr. Robertson, the most elegant and picturesque narrator among modern historians; industrious, sagacious, and rational, though not often very profound or original."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH's Life, &c. i. ch. i.

Speaking of the style of Burnet's Own Times, Charles Lamb remarks, "None of Dr. Robertson's periods with three members." (Lamb's Letters.)

"In Adam Smith's day all poetical criticism not contained in Dr Blair's Lectures or Lord Kames's Elements would have been hooted out of reasonable society; now those books themselves, and the school which they represent, have sunk into the lowest estimation. Robertson and Hume would of course have been Smith's standards of historical writing; now the world can listen with great complacency to Charles Lamb's assertion that their books have the same title to the character of histories as the chess-boards which we see inscribed in gilt letters with the same honourable name."—REV. F. D. MATTHEW. Lects. on National Education, 1839, 116

See, also, Life of Sir J. M. prefixed to Hist. of Rev. in England, 1834, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1835, i. 358; Encyc. Brit., art. Gibbon. It will be remembered that Gibbon himself in 1779 calls Robertson "the first historian of the present age," (Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 713;) and Robertson, in 1788, admitted that he himself was, before Gibbon took the field, "the most illustrious historian of the age," (ut supra, 382,) and Gibbon's eulogistic notices of the various excellencies of Hume and Robertson (ut supra, 55, 69, 257, and HUME, DAVID, p. 917, col. 2, supra) must not be forgotten.

"I will frankly own," he writes at a later date, "that my pride is elated as often as I find myself ranked in the triumvirate of British historians of the present age, and, though I feel myself the Lepidus, I contemplate with pleasure the superiority of my colleagues."—Gibbon to Robertson, London, Sept 1, 1783 Stewart's Account, &c.

Five years later, he writes,

"The praise which has ever been the most flattering to my ear is to find my name associated with the names of Robertson and Hume, and provided I can maintain my place in the triumvirate I am indifferent at what distance I am ranked below my companions and masters."—Gibbon to Robertson, London, March 26, 1788 Stewart's Account, &c.

Robertson was not behindhand in civility, and his deliberate judgment of the History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, after the careful perusal of the whole work, is well worth recording on this page.

"When I consider the extent of your undertaking, and the immense labour of historical and philosophic research requisite towards executing every part of it, I am astonished that all this should have been accomplished by one man. I know no example, in any age or nation, of such a vast body of valuable and elegant information communicated by any individual."—Robertson to Gibbon, Edinburgh, July 30, 1788 Gibbon's Miscell. Works, 382.

This is high—we dare not say it is too high—commendation.

Whilst on this theme, we feel tempted to cite a few lines on Hume and Robertson by the ancient censor of the latter,—remarkable, if for nothing else, from the fact of their having been buried in a lost manuscript for the last fourscore years.

"He [Johnson] defied any one to produce a classical book written in Scotland since Buchanan. Robertson, he said, used pretty words, but he liked Hume better, and neither of them would he allow to be more to Clarendon than a rat to a cat."—Campbell's Diary of a Visit to England in 1775, Sydney, New South Wales, (why not republished in London?) 1864 see Edin. Rev., Oct. 1859.

But we find ourselves again plunging into a sea of quotations,—quotations pleasant to ourselves, perhaps not grievous to our readers, but already carried to as great an extent as the plan of our comprehensive register will permit. Leaving then the student who has accompanied us thus far to his own—we trust not unprofitable—researches, we pursue our way to "fresh fields and pastures new," first directing his attention to comparisons between Robertson, Gibbon, and Hume, in . Schlosser's Hist. of the 18th Century, (see pp. 664, 917, supra;) F. Schlegel's Lects. on the Hist. of Lit., Lect. Robinson, Edward, S.T.D., D.D., LL.D., b. April 10, 1794, in Southington, Conn., where his father (see No. 14, infra) was for forty-one years pastor of the Congregational Church, graduated at Hamilton College with the highest honours in 1816, and from October, 1817, to October, 1818, was tutor in mathematics and Greek in the same institution. In the autumn of 1818 he married the youngest sister of the late President Kirkland, and was called to mourn her loss in July of the following year. In December, 1821, he went to Andover, in order to carry through the press a manual for college instruction,—the first Books of the Read, with Latin Notes, selected chiefly from Heyne. While there, he commenced the study of Hebrew, and a year later was employed, at the request of the author, in correcting the proofs of the second edition of Professor Moses Stuart's Hebrew Grammar, (Andover, 1823, 8vo,) and soon afterwards became his associate in the preparation of the same edition. From 1823 to 1826 he acted as assistant to Professor Stuart in the chair of Sacred Literature at the Theological Seminary at Andover; from June, 1826, to 1830, pursued his studies and observations chiefly in Halle, (where, in 1828, he married the youngest daughter of Professor Ludwig H. von Jakob: see ROBINSON, MRS. EDWARD,) and also in Berlin, and other parts of Europe; was Professor Extraordinary of Sacred Literature at Andover Theological Seminary, 1830-1833; resided in Boston, 1833-1837; and from 1837 until his death, Jan. 27, 1863, was Professor of Biblical Literature in the Union Theological Seminary, New York. In 1838, in conjunction with the Rev. Eli Smith, of the Beyrout Mission, he made that remarkable exploration of Palestine, the results of which, digested by two years' diligent labour at Berlin, (1838-40,) and given to the world in 1841, to borrow the language of Carl Ritter, opened "the second great era of our knowledge of the Promised Land."

In 1832 the same intelligent travellers (Dr. Robinson performed part of the journey with other companions) revisited Jerusalem, and extended their investigations so far beyond the field surveyed on their former tour that, to the one hundred and twenty ancient places then first identified and described, about fifty more such localities were added. These Later Researches were published in 1856. Having thus given a rapid sketch of the prominent points in the life of this accomplished scholar, (the reader should also consult the notices in Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 18, 25, 39, 43, 382, and Duyekink's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, u. 167, and Supp., 14, 51,) we proceed to present a chronological list of his publications, accompanied with critical notes.

1. With STUART, MOSES, A Greek Grammar of the New Testament, trans. from the German of G. B. Winer, Andover, 1825, r. 8vo.

"This is an ably-executed translation of the first edition ('Leipzig, 1822) of the preceding work it is, however, now completely superseded by the following work of Professor Stuart A Grammar of the New Testament Dialect, Andover, 1834-1841, 8vo, London, 1838, 8vo [See STUART, MOSES, Nos. 8, 18]—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 1839, 206.

In 1839, and again in 1850, appeared Winer's Grammar of the Idioms of the Greek Language of the New Testament, (from the 4th German ed, 1836,) trans. by J. H. Agnew and O. G. Ebbecke, N. York, 8vo; and in 1859, A Grammar of the New Testament Diction, from Winer's 6th ed, trans. by Edward Masson, Edin. and Phila., 8vo, pp. x., 708, (noticed in N. Amer. Rev., April, 1860, 546, by Charles Short.) A translation of Winer's Grammar of the Chaldee Language, with Additions, by Horatio B. Hackett, was pub at Andover, 1845, 8vo. 2 Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament, from the Clavis Philologica of Chris Abraham Wahl, Andover, 1825, r. 8vo The improvements of the translator make this a new Lexicon of the New Testament: Wahl's texts are verified and corrected, many of the definitions are framed de novo from the New Testament, and illustrations are added from Schleusner and others, (see Horne's Bibl. Bib., 213. But, good as this Lexicon is, it has long been superseded by No. 9, infra 3. Biblical Repository, N. York and Andover, 8vo, 1831-34, 4 vols., edited and written chiefly by Dr. Robertson. This work, established by Dr. Robertson, is still continued, (see its history, and that of the allied periodicals, in Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, 48.) Dr. R. has assisted in some of the later vols. of the collection. It consists of Essays and Tracts, original and translated, (especially from the German,) connected with Biblical literature and theology. It attracted great attention among European Biblical scholars.

"It delights me and all my Cambridge and other friends to find that our American neighbours are really outstripping us in the cause of Biblical literature"—SAMUEL LEE, Hebrew Prof Univ. Camb., 1831.

"Should you succeed in making the contents of your Repository hereafter as rich and valuable as they have been hitherto, it will become a classical book for the study of theology in America, and will be the commencement of a new era"—Prof Tholuck, of Halle, to Dr. Robinson

See other testimonies to the value of this work in Horne's Bibl. Bib., 351, Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 304; N. Amer. Rev., lxxxv. 82, (by Dr. J. P. Thompson.) The 30 vols of the three series of the Biblical Repository, (1831-38, 1839-44, 1845-50,) and the 18 vols of the Bibliotheca Sacra,—see No. 11, infra,—(1843-60,) with the two vols. of Indexes, by Dr. Agnew and Mr. Draper, should be in every theological library. 4. Calmet's Dictionary, as pub. by Charles Taylor, &c., Amer. ed., revised, with large additions, Bost. and N. York, 1832, r. 8vo: stereotyped. Commended in Horne's Bibl. Bib., 370. See, also, N. Amer. Rev., lxxxv. 82. 5. A Greek Grammar, by Philip Buttmann, trans. from the German, Andover, 1833, 8vo; new ed., from the 18th German ed. of Alexander Buttmann, N. York, 1851, 8vo. Commended by Professor H. Drieler, C. Beck, M. Sturges, J. J. Owen, Univ. Quar. Rev., Evangel. Rev., &c. There has been recently published—and the student must procure it—Grammatik des Neutestamentlichen Sprachgebrauchs: Im Anschlusse an Ph. Buttmann's Griechische Grammatik, bearbeitet von Alex. Buttmann, Professor, Berlin, 1859, pp. xvi., 374. See N. Amer. Rev., April, 1860, 548. 6. A Dictionary of the Holy Bible, for the Use of Schools and Young Persons, Bost. and N. York, 1833, 12mo: stereotyped. Commended in Horne's Bibl. Bib., 370. The new Dictionary of the Holy Bible pub. by the Amer. Tract Soc., N. York, 1860, is based chiefly on this Dictionary, but without any aid from Dr. Robinson. See

Amer. Pub. Circ., Oct. 15, 1859, 512. 7. A Harmony of the Gospels in Greek, in the General Order of Le Clerc and Newcome, with Newcome's Notes; printed from the Text and with the Various Readings of Knappe: the whole revised and the Greek Text newly arranged, Andover, 1834, 8vo. See Horne's Bibl. Bib., 136. Now superseded by No. 12. 8. A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament: including the Biblical Chaldee, trans. from the Latin of William Gesenius, Boston, 8vo, 1836; 2d ed., 1843; 3d ed., 1849; 4th ed., 1850; 5th ed., with Corrections and Additions, partly furnished by the Author in Manuscript, and partly condensed from his larger Thesaurus as completed by Roediger, 1854, pp. 1172. We have before us commendations of this translation by Dr. Horne, (Bibl. Bib., 206,) and N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 282, (see, also, Prince, Rev., ix. 88;) and of the 5th ed by Dr. S. Davidson, Jewish Chronicle, Clerical Journal, and Kitto's Jour. of Sacred Lit. See, also, Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1855, xv. 1859, lxxiii, and N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 532, (by Moses Stuart,) lxxxv. 115. The sale to Oct 1860, chiefly in America, amounted to no less than 12,500 copies,—a creditable fact for American scholarship. The student must keep by it the 17th ed. of Gesenius's Hebrew Grammar, by Roediger, trans., with additions, by T. J. Conant, 1855, 8vo. 9. A Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament, Boston, 1836, r. 8vo; Lon., ed. by S. T. Bloomfield, 8vo, 1837, 2d ed., 1838, Edin., ed. by Alex. Negris and Rev. John Duncan, 8vo, 1837, 2d ed., 1838; 3d ed., 1845. A stereotyped edit was likewise pub. by Tegg, Lon., 1829, 8vo. last impression, 1860. Also two London Abridgments, one pub. by Robson, 1840, 12mo, 8s. 6d., and one by Bell, new ed., 1851, 12mo, 7s. 6d.

"Thus there now first begins, since the days of Reland, the second great epoch of our knowledge of the Promised Land. . . It lays open, unquestionably, one of the richest discoveries, one of the most important scientific conquests, which has been made for a long time in the field of Geography and Biblical Archaeology. . . What noble confirmations the truth of the Holy Scriptures receives from many passages!"—CARL RITTER.

"It is the first attempt, and a very successful one it is, to condense into one body the latest and most authentic accounts of that important part of the globe in an historical, scriptural, and geographical point of view."—HENRY HALLAM Address to the Royal Soc. of Lit., 1841

"The most valuable work on the Geography of those countries in connection with the Scriptures"—Bickersteth's C. S., ed 1844, 422

"We have found in the work of Dr Robinson more solid and important information on the geography and on the topography of the Holy Land than has accumulated since the date of Reland's 'Palestina'."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec 1841, 182

"The only classical book on the subject of Palestine topography, since the days of Hadrian Reland, and a better one even than his"—MOSES STUART N. Amer. Rev., April, 1851, 277

But the excellent work of Reland—Palestina ex Monumentis Veteribus et Tabulis adcuratius illustrata, Traj ad Rhen, 1714, 2 tom. 4to, et Norimb, 1716, 4to, and in Ugolini's Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacrum, tom vi—must not be neglected it should be diligently compared with Robinson's Researches

"It is the peculiar characteristic of Reland's inestimable account of Palestine, a work derived from the purest sources, to exhibit in a perspicuous and prominent manner the rarest and most valuable intelligence"—DR. E. D. CLARKE

"A treasure of learning esteemed by the whole world at a very high price, and which will cause the name of Reland to be eternalized"—BACHMANN Sacred Geography

"One of the most elaborate and valuable works on Biblical geography that has ever been published"—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 370

"It should be almost got by heart by those that would have a general knowledge in such matters"—DR. WOTTON
"Compendium elegantissimum atque . . . maxime commendandum"—WATSON Bibl. Theolog. Selecta, tom. iii 106

The other Biblical works of Reland may still be consulted with advantage

But to return to Dr. Robinson a 2d ed of the Biblical Researches was pub in Boston and London in 1856, in 2 vols 8vo, and with these appeared, (vol iii. of the whole, or sold separately, 1 vol. 8vo,) also in German, at Berlin—Later Biblical Researches in Palestine and the Adjacent Regions: a Journal of Travels in the Year 1852, by Edward Robinson, Eli Smith, and others, drawn up from the Original Diaries, with Historical Illustrations by E. Robinson, D.D. Biblical Researches in Palestine, 3d ed, Lon., 1867, 3 vols 8vo, £2 2s. In the Preface to the first edition of the Researches, (1841,) Dr. Robinson remarked,

"Were it in our power again to travel through the Land of Promise, with the experience acquired during our former journey and from the preparation of this work, and furnished, too, with suitable instruments, I doubt not we should be able to lay before the Christian world results far more important and satisfactory. But this high privilege I at least can never more hope to enjoy"

So little do we know "what shall be on the morrow." It is interesting to compare with this Preface that of fifteen years later:

"With this volume closes, of course, the record of my personal observations in the Holy Land. The principles according to which it has been prepared are the same with those which lie at the basis of my former work. If it shall be deemed a worthy supplement to that work, I shall be satisfied. To these my Biblical Researches in the Holy Land, the fruit of thirty years of preparation, and of personal travels in 1838 and 1852, I can hope to add nothing more. The work is now published as a whole, and in a permanent form. It will be seen by the Map that the routes of the different years rarely coincide."—Author's Preface.

The late offering to the intelligent devotion of a Christian world has been accepted as "a worthy supplement to the preceding.

"A work which well sustains his previous reputation."—Knight's English Cyc., v., 1857, 128.

"The tour of Dr Robinson and Smith in Palestine in 1852 was far from being a repetition of the tour of 1838. With the exception of a single excursion into the vicinity of Hebron, the map exhibits no trace of the second tour south of Jerusalem. The scenes of the second exploration were mainly Galilee and the regions east and west of the great northern road leading from Jerusalem to Nabulus. Dr. Robinson's researches, it will be understood, are but preliminary to the preparation of a Biblical Geography. . . It is devoutly to be wished that the life and health of Dr. Robinson may be spared to complete this cherished object of years of toil"—J. P. THOMPSON, D.D. N. Amer. Rev., July, 1857, 78-119, (q v.)

We continue our list of publications:

11. Bibliotheca Sacra, 8vo, 1843 et seq. Established and largely contributed to by Dr Robinson. The First Series consists of Nos. 1-3, 1843; the Second Series, 1844-60, 17 vols., and continued. See No. 3, supra, Trubner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, 48. 12. A Harmony of the Four Gospels in Greek, according to the Text of Hahn, newly arranged, with Explanatory Notes, Bost., 1845, 8vo. In 1848 was pub., anonymously, A Harmony of the Four Gospels, following the Greek Harmony of E. Robinson, D.D., Lon., 8vo, pp. xii., 203 see Gent. Mag., 1848, i. 174. A Revised Edition of Robinson's Greek Harmony was stereotyped and pub., Bost., 1851-1853, 8vo, pp. 256. 13. A Harmony of the Four Gospels in English, according to the Common Version, newly arranged, with Explanatory Notes, Bost., 1846, 12mo, Lon., (Rel. Tract. Soc.) 1847, p. 8vo, also in French, Brussels, 1851, 8vo; new ed., Bost., 1852, 12mo, pp. 236. 14. Memoir of the Rev. William Robinson, formerly Pastor of the Congregational Church in Southington, Conn., with Some Account of his Ancestors in this Country; Printed as Manuscript for Private Distribution, N. York, 1859, 8vo, pp. 214. Commended by Whitmore's Amer. Genealog., 157. 15. Physical Geography of the Holy Land; a Supplement to the late Author's Biblical Researches in Palestine, Lon., 1865, p. 8vo; Bost., 1865, 8vo, pp. xvi., 399.

"A capital summary of our present knowledge."—Lon. Athen., 1865.

"The work is quite complete in itself, though it is only the third part of a scheme which the author dearly cherished, and on which he was earnestly employed when death closed his labours. He had intended to divide it [his projected work], into three parts: Physical Geography, Historical Geography, and a Topographical Dictionary. . . This geographical treatise is intended to meet a great want, and is executed with considerable ability."—Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 250.

"Almost entirely borrowed from other explorers, and is at once rendered so incomplete as to be almost worthless by the investigations of Mr. Tristram, the results of which are recorded in this volume, [Tristram's Land of Israel]"—Lon. Reader, 1866, ii. 608.

Robinson, Mrs. Edward, married to the preceding in 1828, and well known before that event to the literary world as Miss Therese Albertina Louise von Jakob, is a daughter of Ludwig Heinrich von Jakob, Professor of Political Economy at Halle, where she was born, January 26, 1797. One of the most learned women of the age, she has done credit to the discoment of the illustrious Goethe, who introduced her to the Republic of Letters as one (the compliment is rather at the expense of her sex) "who had the heart of a woman but the brain of a man." Her works—a list of which we subjoin—have, with the exception of Nos. 1 and 2, been published under her nom de plume of TALVI, an anagram of the initials of her names. 1. Scott's Old Mortality, in German, by Ernst Berthold, Halle, 1822. 2. Scott's Black Dwarf, in German, by Ernst Berthold, Halle, 1822. 3. Psyche: Original Tales in German, Halle, about 1824. She published other fugitive tales in German, not collected in this volume. 4. Serbische Lieder, (Serbian Songs,) Halle, 1826, 2 vols. 8vo, 2d ed., revised and enlarged, Leipzig, 1853, 2 vols. 12mo. See No. 10.

Robinson, Horatio N., LL.D., a self-taught astronomer and mathematician, b. Jan. 1, 1806, at Hartwick, Otsego co., New York, is well known as the author of a series of mathematical works which, in consequence of their "originality, simplicity, and practical utility," have obtained a very large circulation among the colleges and schools of the United States. 1. Arithmetic, Theoretical and Practical, 1846, 18mo. 2. Elementary Algebra, 1847, 12mo. 3. University Algebra, 1847, 12mo. 4. Natural Philosophy, 1848, 12mo. 5. Elementary Astronomy, 1849, 12mo. 6. University Astronomy, 1849, 8vo. 7. Geometry, containing Trigonometry and Conic Sections, 1850, 8vo. 8. Surveying and Navigation, 1852, 8vo. 9. Concise Mathematical Operations: a Practical Sequel to Mathematics and Astronomy, 1854, 8vo. All of the above, with the exception of Nos. 5 and 9, (pub. by E. H. Pease and Co., Albany,) were pub. by Jacob Ernst at Cincinnati; but all of the vols. composing Robinson's Series of Mathematics—it will be seen that there are some additions—are now (1861) issued by Ivison, Phinney, Blake-man & Co., of New York, in the following order: (we add some new editions, 1866.)

I. Progressive Primary Arithmetic, 1858, 12mo; 1863, 16mo; edited by Daniel W. Fish, 1866, 12mo.

II. Progressive Intellectual Arithmetic, 1858, 12mo; 1863, 16mo.

III. Progressive Practical Arithmetic, 1859, 12mo; 1863, 16mo; edited by D. W. Fish, 1865, 12mo.

IV. Key to Progressive Practical Arithmetic, 1859, 12mo; 1863, 16mo.

V. Progressive Higher Arithmetic, 1860, 12mo; 1863, 12mo; 1865, 8vo.

VI. Key to Progressive Higher Arithmetic, 1860, 12mo; 1863, 12mo.

VII. New Elementary Algebra, 1859, 12mo; 1865, 12mo.

VIII. Key to New Elementary Algebra, 1859, 12mo; 1860, 12mo.

IX. University Algebra, 1847, 12mo, 1857, 12mo; 1862, 12mo; 1865, 8vo.

X. Key to University Algebra, 1847, 12mo, 1862, 12mo.

XI. Geometry and Trigonometry, new ed., 1860, 8vo; 1862, 12mo; 1865, 8vo.

XII. Surveying and Navigation, 1852, 8vo; edited by Orren Root, 1863, 8vo, 1864, 8vo.

XIII. Analytical Geometry and Conic Sections, 1861, 8vo.

XIV. Differential and Integral Calculus, 1861, 8vo; edited by I. F. Quinby, LL.D., 1868, 8vo.

XV. Key to Differential and Integral Calculus, 1868, 8vo.

XVI. Elementary Astronomy, 1857, 12mo.

XVIII. Concise Mathematical Operations, 1854, 8vo.

XIX. Key to Robinson's Algebra, Geometry, Calculus and Surveying, 1861, 8vo.

XX. Progressive Table Book, 1862, 16mo.

XXI. Rudiments of Written Arithmetic, 1861, 16mo; edited by D. W. Fish, 1865, 12mo.

XXII. Arithmetical Examples, 1864, 16mo.

"Can any course of instruction more elaborate and progressive than this be well imagined? Notwithstanding the short time that this series, as revised and completed, has been published, nearly two hundred thousand volumes are stated by the publishers to have been disposed of during the year 1863."—Amer. Lit. Gaz., Sept. 16, 1864, 278

Robinson, John, 1575-1625, a native of England, educated at the University of Cambridge, began his ministerial labours in the vicinity of Norwich in the Established Church, but was suspended by the bishop for nonconformity in ceremonies; gathered at Norwich a congregation of Puritans, and, with a number of those like-minded, settled at Amsterdam in 1608, and at Leyden in 1609; dismissed a portion of his flock to Plymouth, New England, July 22, 1620, with the intention of following them, but never reached "the haven where he would be," and continued in the exercise of his ministerial functions at Leyden; was followed to the grave by his fellow-members of the University, the ministers and "chief estates" of that mother of learned men; but will live in the grateful memory of millions of the lovers of civil and religious freedom to the end of time.

He was the author of a number of controversial and devotional treatises, which were published collectively: The Works of John Robinson, Pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers, with a Memoir and Annotations by Robert Ashton, Secretary of the Congregational Board, Lon. and Bost., 1851, 3 vols 12mo. Reviewed in Ecles. Rev., 4th Ser., xxxi. 1, (copied in Internat. Mag., March, 1852, 367.) In vol. i. will be found an account of the descendants of Robinson, (his sons John and Isaac emigrated to New England in 1629 or 1630,) from the pen of Dr. Allen, of Northampton, Mass., from which it appears that they are very numerous, scattered over New England and other States of the Union, and occupying respectable and useful stations in life. See, also, Sprague's Annals, Trin. Congreg. i., 1857, 1-6; Memoir of Rev. W. Robinson, by E. Robinson, D.D., 1859, 8vo; Edward Everett's Orations and Speeches, iii., 1859, Index; Remarks of George Sumner (who had investigated the Leyden records for notices of the Puritans there) at the General Celebration at Plymouth, Aug. 1, 1859; *Chris. Holmes, M.D.); histories of the United States and of New England, passim.

"He was a man not easily to be paralleled for all things, whose singular virtues we shall not take upon us here to describe. Neither need we, for they so well are known both by friends and enemies. . . . He was very profitable in his ministry, and comfortable to his people. He was much beloved by them, and as loving was he unto them, and entirely sought their good for soul and body."—JOHN R. BRADFORD.

Even the stout opponent of the Independents bears testimony that "Robinson was a man of excellent parts, and the most learned, polished, and modest spirit that ever separated from the Church of England."—BAYLY Dissuaves against the Errors of the Times.

"The more appropriate duties of the occasion permit us to pay only a passing tribute of respect to the precious memory of Robinson and his little flock, canonized as they are in the patriotic calendar of America, and honoured in a progeny which in every State of the Union, probably, traces its lineage to Plymouth Rock."—EDWARD EVERETT Orations and Speeches, iii., 1859, 305. Dorchester in 1630, 1776, and 1855

Robinson, Mary, also called Maria, 1758-1800, the daughter of an American sea-captain named Darby, but a native of Bristol, England, was married at fifteen to Mr. Robinson, whose pecuniary difficulties caused his wife to try her fortune on the stage. Whilst performing in the character of Perdita, (a name which she subsequently assumed in amatory correspondence,) she attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales, (afterwards George IV.), then in his 18th year. An intimacy of two years with this person was followed by one equally reprehensible with an officer of the army. She pub. a vol. of Poems in 1775, 8vo; Captivity, a Poem, and Celadon and Lydia, a Tale, 1777, 4to; 2 more vols. of Poems, 8vo, in 1791, a number of single poems, novels, plays, pamphlets, &c. between 1775 and 1799; and The False Friend, 1799, 4 vols. 12mo. The Effusions of Love, purporting to be her correspondence with the Prince of Wales, was pub. in 177-8vo; her Lyrical Tales appeared in 1800, or 8vo, her Memoirs, written by herself, were pub. after her death in 1801, 4 vols. 12mo, (also 1828, 12mo, and again, with Charlotte Clarke's Autobiography, 18mo and 12mo,) her Poems, 1803, 2 vols. 12mo; and the Poetical Works of the late Mrs. Robinson, now first collected, were pub. by her daughter, Mary Robinson, in 1806, 3 vols. p. 8vo; 1826, 12mo. Robinson, Robert, 1735-1790, a native of Swaffham, Norfolk, after studying with great zeal and success at the Grammar-School at Soarving, in his 15th year was apprenticed to a hair-dresser in London, who kindly gave up his indentures when, after five years' application, he declared his preference for the pulpit. At the age of nineteen he commenced preaching among the Methodists, and renounced present support and a fortune in reversion, proffered by a rich relation, when thus tempted to dissolve his connection with the Dissenters. After two years' experience in his new position, he associated with several others in the formation of an Independent Society in Norwich; but shortly afterwards (in 1759) he accepted the charge of a Baptist congregation at Cambridge: and in 1773 his insufficient support obliged him to add to his pastoral labours the business of farming and traffic in corn and coals. His leisure hours were devoted to study, pursued to great advantage by aid of the Cambridge libraries; and during the last eighteen years of his life he pub. a number of works, of which the following are the most important: 1. Sermons from the Original French of the Late Rev. James Saurin, [two in 1770,] 1775-84, 5 vols. 8vo; (Memoirs of the Reformation in France, and of Saurin's Life, in vol. i.) a 6th vol., trans. by Dr. Henry Hunter, was pub. in 1796, 8vo; a 7th, trans. by Joseph Sutcliffe, in 1805, 8vo; and an 8th vol., also by J. S., in 1813, 8vo. The 5th edits. of Robinson's 5 vols. and of Hunter's 6th vol. were pub. in 1812; and with these are sold the 2d ed. of Sutcliffe's 7th vol. and the 1st ed. (1813) of his 8th vol. Another ed., 181-, 11 vols. 8vo. New ed. of the whole, ed. by Rev. S. Burder, 1824, 6 vols. 8vo, again, with three addit. sermons, 1836, 3 vols. 8vo. See RIVERS, DAVID, No. 2. "His style was pure, unaffected, and eloquent."—R. ROBINSON. "Saurin united in himself the several qualities of the scholar, the gentleman, and the divine"—Dr DOBSON. "Saurin felt that he could flourish, lighten, thunder, and enchant like a magician"—CECIL. "Saurin excelled in bold originality of thought, method, and expression"—DR E. WILLIAMS.

"Saurin possessed brilliant talents, considerable learning, and very considerable powers of eloquence"—GEORGE DYER.

Those who desire the original will procure the Nouvelle édition, revue et corrigée, à la Haye, 1749, 12 vols. 8vo. There is an ed., Amst., 1720, 11 vols. 8vo.

2. A Plea for the Divinity of Our Lord Jesus Christ, &c., 1776. Answered by T. Lindsey in An Examination of Mr. Robinson's Plea for the Divinity of Christ. It was believed that Robinson subsequently became a Socinian, (Priestley's testimony is very decided on this point,) but Robinson himself, only a month before his death, declared to his friend Feary,

"I am no Socinian, I am no Arian, my soul rests its sole hope of salvation on the atonement of Jesus Christ, my Lord and my God. My views of Divine truth are precisely what they were when I wrote my Plea for the Divinity of Jesus Christ."—Works of Andrew Fuller, Phila., 1815, h. 221-223, (q. v.)

An Essay on the Composition of a Sermon, from the French of John Claude, with Life, Notes, &c., Camb., 1778, 2 vols. 8vo. With Appendix by Rev. Charles Simeon, 1796, r. 8vo. Several times reprinted; last ed., with Appendix on the Choice of Books, Lon., 1855, p. 8vo. See, also, Simeon's Works, Williams's C. P.; EYRE, JOHN, D.D. 5. A Plan of Lectures on the Principles of Nonconformity, 1778, 8vo, 5th ed., 1781, 18mo, last ed., 1843, 12mo. Noticed in the House of Lords by Lord Shelburne, and in the House of Commons by Burke and Fox, and answered by Mr. Burgess, Preb. of Winchester, (see Robinson's Pref. to 5th ed. of A Plan, &c.,) by Candidus, 1779, 8vo, and by others. 6. In this collection he had a good claim to a place: of preachers he was one of the most eloquent.

"A person remarking to Mr. [Robert] Hall that he reminded him of Mr. Robinson of Cambridge, he replied, 'Sir, Mr. Robinson had a musical voice, and was master of all its intonations; he had wonderful self-possession, and could say what he pleased, when he pleased, and how he pleased; while my voice and manner were naturally bad; and, far from having self-command, I never entered the pulpit without omitting to say something that I wished to say, and saying something that I wished unsaid. Besides all this, I ought to have known that for me to speak slow was ruin."—Gardner's Music and Friends.

Robison, John, LL.D., 1739-1805, a native of Stirlingshire, Scotland, entered the University of Glasgow, 1750, and was made M.A., 1756; from 1759 to 1761 was at sea as instructor to a son of Admiral Knowles, made another voyage in 1762, and another in 1763, in 1766 succeeded Dr. Black in the chemical chair of the University of Glasgow, and retained this position for four years; in 1770 accompanied Sir Charles Knowles to St. Petersburg, and in 1772 was made inspector of the corps of maritime cadets at Cronstadt, with a large salary and the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the Russian service, in the winter of 1778 was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, commenced his lectures in the succeeding winter, and here continued his labours until his death. 1. Proofs of a Conspiracy against all the Religions and Governments of Europe, carried on in the Secret Meetings of Freemasons, Illuminati, and Reading Societies, Edin., 1797, 8vo; 2d ed., 1797, 8vo; Dubl., 1798, 8vo; 4th ed., Lon., 1798, 8vo; and N. York, 1798, 8vo. The credulity displayed in this work did little credit to the philosopher's penetration. See Pursuits of Lit., Dial. IV., Notes 3, 122, Freemasonry, its Pretensions Exposed, N. York, 1828, 8vo. It is to be remembered that Robison himself was a Freemason. 2. Lectures on the Elements of Chemistry, &c., by Dr. Black, Edin., 1803, 2 vols. 4to. See BLACK, JOSEPH; Edin. Rev., iii. 1-21, (by Lord Brougham.) 3. Elements of Mechanical Philosophy, being the Substance of a Course of Lectures on that Subject: vol. i., 8vo, 1804. This volume,—which is devoted to Dynamics and Astronomy,—together with some MSS. intended to have formed part of a second volume, and the greater portion of the articles furnished by Professor Robison to the Encyclopædia Britannica, were pub. in 1822, under the title of A System of Mechanical Philosophy, with Notes by David Brewster, LL.D., London, 4 vols. 8vo. Professor Playfair never found time to carry out the design thus fortunately executed by Sir David Brewster.

The contributions to the Encyclopædia Britannica contained in these volumes originally appeared in the 3d edition, vol. xiii. (Optics) to the last, 1793-1801. Some of them are still republished, and find a place in the 8th edition, 1853-60.

"Notwithstanding some degree of prolixity and want of arrangement, which could scarcely be avoided in the preparation of original articles for such a mode of publication, the whole of them, taken together, undeniably exhibit a more complete view of the modern improvements of physical science than had ever before been in the possession of the British public, and display such a combination of acquired knowledge with original power of reasoning as has fallen to the lot of a few only of the most favoured of mankind"—DR. THOMAS YOUNG. Life of Robison, in Encyc. Brit.

"Although Dr. Robison's name cannot be associated with the great discoveries of the century which he adorned, yet the memory of his talents and his virtues will be long cherished by his country. Rochester, John Wilmot, Earl of, 1647 or 1648-1680, the son of Henry, Earl of Rochester, and educated at Wadham College, Oxford, returned from his travels in France and Italy in his 18th year; in 1666, and again in 1666, distinguished himself in naval engagements against the Dutch; attached himself to the court, where he was noted for drunkenness, buffoonery, and poetry; towards the close of his life felt compunctions for his past course, and, through the influence of Bishop Burnet, left the world a sincere penitent, and a firm believer in the truths and a joyful participator of the consolations of the "everlasting gospel."

Burnet's Life of this nobleman has been noticed on a preceding page: see BURNET, GILBERT, p. 297, supra. It was first pub. 1680, 8vo, and has been frequently republished, (with Life of Sir M. Hale, 1829, 12mo, some thick paper; separately, 1841, 18mo,) and will be found in Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog., vol. vi. See, also, Burnet's Own Times, Funeral Sermon on the Earl of Rochester, by his chaplain, Robert Parsons, 1680, 4to; Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Biog. Brit.; Dryden's Works; Spectator, No. 305, (by Addison:); Park's Walpole's R. & N. Authors; Spence's Anecdotes; Disraeli's Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1853, 262, 314; Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 484, 489. On his death-bed he straitly commanded that all of his licentious and profane writings should be destroyed; but in the year of his death, 1680, there was published, professedly at Antwerp, really at London, a volume, 8vo, purporting to contain his Poems on Several Occasions; reprinted, Lon., 1685, 8vo. (Bibl. Anglo-Poet., No. 623, £5 5s.) We also notice his *Poems, 1691, 8vo; 1696, 8vo; his Familiar Letters, 1697, 8vo; his Works, (1702,) 8vo; 2d ed., 1707; 3d ed., 1714, 8vo; 1714, 12mo, (Bibl. Anglo-Poet., No. 624, £1 1s.); his Remains, 1718, 12mo, his Poetical Works, with those of the Earls of Roscommon and Dorset, the Dukes of Devonshire, Buckinghamshire, &c., with Memoirs of their Lives, 1731-32, 2 vols. 12mo. Poems, with those of Edmund Waller, 18mo. See, also, editions in Bohn's Londres, 2114. But which of the poems thus ascribed to Rochester are really his it is impossible to decide:*

"There is no good edition of Rochester's Poems that professedly printed at Antwerp in the year in which he died is scarce and dear, but contains much that he never wrote, the still more obscene edition, 2 vols., 1731-2, fetches a still larger price, but is not to be relied on. The castrated editions are common enough, but too incomplete."—PETER CUNNINGHAM, in his ed. of Johnson's Lives of the Poets, 1854, i. 182. See Index

As regards the first edition, 1680,

"Of some of the pieces, however, there is no doubt. The 'Imitation of Horace's Satire,' the 'Verses to Lord Mulgrave,' the 'Satire against Man,' the 'Verses upon Nothing,' and perhaps some others, are, I believe, genuine, and perhaps most of those which this collection exhibits."—Dr. JOHNSON. Lives of the English Poets

This does not help us much. But what is the verdict of the dominion upon the merits of those which he accepts as genuine?

"His songs have no parti alar character: they tell, like other songs, in smooth and easy language, of scorn and kindness, dismission and desertion, absence and inconstancy, with the commonplaces of artificial courtship. They are commonly smooth and easy, but have little nature and little sentiment. His imitation of Horace on Lucilius is not inelegant or unhappy. . . . The strongest effort of his muse is his poem upon 'Nothing' . . . Of the satire against Man, Rochester can only claim what remains when all Boileau's part is taken away. In all his works there is a sprightliness and vigour, and everywhere may be found tokens of a mind which study might have carried to excellence."—Ibid.

"Rochester, in his Satire on Man, very much improves on his pattern in Boileau. Horace's Supper, Boileau's Feast, and Rochester's Feast, all very good. . . . Rochester has neither so much delicacy or exactness as Lord Dorset."—POPE. Spence's Anecdotes, ed. 1820, fol. 66, 136. See, also, 5, 19, 200, 220, OLDHAM, JOHN, (quotation from Pope)

"Lord Rochester's poems have much more obscenity than wit, more wit than poetry, more poetry than politeness."—HORACE WALPOLE. R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., iii. 234

"This lord's licentious productions too forcibly warrant the sentence of outlawry that decorum and taste have passed upon them."—THOMAS PARK, ibid., 244

"I remember I heard him [Andrew Marvell] say that the Earl of Rochester was the only man in England that had the true vein of satire."—AUBREY. Lives, iii. 438

"The very name of Rochester is offensive to modern ears, yet does his poetry discover such energy of style and such poignancy of satire, as give ground to imagine what so fine a genius, had he fallen in a more happy age and had followed better models, was capable of producing."—HUME. Hist. of Eng., ch lxxi

"Wilmot Earl of Rochester was naturally modest, till the court corrupted him. His wit had in it a peculiar brightness, to which none could ever arrive."—BISHOP BURNET. Hist. of his Own Times, ed. 1833, i. 483

"He was . . . thoroughly acquainted with the classic authors, both Greek and Latin; a thing very rare (if not peculiar to him) among those of his quality."—WOOD. Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii. 1229.

Rochester, Lawrence Hyde, Earl of, d. 1711, Lord Treasurer and Prime Minister of England, noticed on preceding pages, (see CLARENDON, EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF; CLARENDON, HENRY HYDE, SECOND EARL OF,) is supposed to be the author of a preface to the first edition of his father's History of the Rebellion, "which abounds with dignified sentiment and filial reverence"—THOMAS PARK. Walpole's R. and N. Authors, iv. 43, (q. v.)

Roe, Sir Thomas, M.P., 1580?–1644, a native of Low-Layton, Essex, educated at Magdalene College, Oxford, was knighted by James I. in 1604, and soon after sent by Prince Henry to make discoveries in America, ambassador to the Great Mogul, (see TERRY, EDWARD), 1614–18; M.P. for Cirencester, 1620, ambassador to Constantinople, 1621–28, to Poland and Sweden, 1629, and to the Diet of Ratisbon, 1641; M.P. for the University of Oxford, 1640; made Chancellor of the Garter and one of the Privy Council. 1. A True and Faithful Relation, &c. of what hath lately happened in Constantinople, &c., Lon., 1622, 4to. 2. A Discourse on the Grisons, &c.; trans. from Fra Paolo Sarpi, 1628, 4to. 3. His Speech in Parliament on Coin and Trade, 1641, 4to. 4. Journal of his Voyage to the East Indies, &c., in French, Paris, 1663. In English, by Mr. Terry, in same volume with George Havers's trans. of P. Della Valle's Travels, Lon., 1664, (some 1665), fol. Della Valle's Travels must not be overlooked:

"These travels comprehend Turkey, Egypt, Palestine, Persia, and the East Indies. They are written in a pleasant, lively manner, what relates to Persia is most valuable."—Stevenson's Cat., No. 118.

Roe's Journal is also pub. in the collections of Kerr, vol. ix.; Churchill, vol. i.; Pinkerton, vol. viii. 5. The Negotiations with the Ottoman Porte, from the Year 1621 to 1628 inclusive, &c., 1740, fol. See HAWKINS, SIR JOHN. In 1730 proposals were issued for printing by subscription The Negotiations and Embassies of Sir Thomas Roe from 1620 to 1644, in 5 vols. folio; but, alas! the project was not sufficiently encouraged, and the folio of 1740 is all that was given to the world. Roebuck, John, M.D., 1718–1794, a man of great ingenuity, the founder of the Carron and other Works in Scotland, and, unfortunately for himself, the lessee of the Duke of Hamilton's Coal and Salt Works at Borrowstonness, was the author of two political pamphlets, and of a few papers in Phil. Trans., Nic. Jour., and Trans. Soc. Edin. See Trans. Soc. Edin., vol. iv.; Chalmers's Biog. Diet., xxvi. 319.

One of his pamphlets was entitled An Enquiry whether the Guilt of the Present Civil War in America ought to be imputed to Great Britain or America, Lon., 1776, 8vo, pp. 73.

"Throws the whole blame and guilt of the American war on the colonists, whom the author charges with the most notorious folly, wickedness, and ingratitude."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nov., i. 240.

Roebuck, John Arthur, M.P., grandson of the preceding, and by his mother a lineal descendant of the poet Tickell, was b. 1801, at Madras, resided for some time in Canada, and in 1824 became a London barrister; was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1832, and is now a Queen's Counsel, and a bencher of the Inner Temple, agent for the House of Assembly of Lower Canada during the dispute between the Executive Government and the House of Assembly in 1835; M.P. for Bath, as a Reformer, 1832–37 and 1841–47, and for Sheffield, 1849–57, and since. In 1855 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the Chairmanship of the Metropolitan Board of Works, at a salary of £1500. He was noted for his advocacy of Reform measures, and in 1856 became Chairman of the Administrative Reform Association, which did little or nothing after his election. Of late years he has been ranked among the Conservatives. 1. Letter to his Late Constituents, Lon., 1835, 8vo. See Life and Correspondence of John Foster, ed. 1856, ii. 451, 454; *Blackw. "We have proved its faithfulness in point of authority."—Edin. Rev., April, 1852, 517–553.

"It was reserved for Mr. Roebuck's work to be offensive without eloquence, and morose without genius. Failing as a historian, Mr. Roebuck might possibly succeed as a pamphleteer, if he would publish by sheets, not volumes."—Lon. Athen., 1852, 191, 215. See, also, Eclec. Rev., 4th Ser., xxxi. 482.

Mr. Roebuck, as we have seen, has been "a pamphleteer," and he has also published a number of political letters, addresses, &c., and articles in the Westminster and Edinburgh Reviews and other periodicals. Notices of his political career will be found in Blackw. Mag., xxxvii. 910, 927, xxxviii. 505, xli. 570, xlii. 530, xliii. 231, 235, 519, xlv. 436. Rogers, John, The Martyr, according to Chester, a descendant, on the mother's side, of Ferdinand, King of Castile, Edward I., Henry III., John, Henry II., Henry I., and William the Conqueror, Kings of England, and the emperor Charlemagne, b. about 1500, and probably at the little village or hamlet of Dentend, in the parish of Aston, then in the suburbs—but now quite surrounded by the city—of Birmingham, was educated at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he took the degree of B.A., 1525, is supposed to have been the same John Rogers who was Rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, or Trinity the Less, London, Dec. 26, 1532, until late in 1534; was for some time Chaplain to the Merchant Adventurers at Antwerp, and subsequently pastor of a Dutch congregation at Wittenberg, returned to England in 1548, presented to the rectory of St. Margaret Moyses and the vicarage of St. Sepulchre, both in London, May 10, 1550, Prebendary of St. Paul's, St. Pancras, and Rector of Chigwell, Aug. 24, 1551, and some time after was chosen Divinity Reader, on the Sunday after the triumphal entry of Queen Mary into London, (Thursday, Aug. 3, 1553,) denounced Romanism at St. Paul's Cross, was subjected to a series of persecutions, including imprisonments, and finally was burnt at Smithfield,—enduring his sufferings with great equanimity,—Feb. 4, 1555. He translated from Melancthon A Waying and Considering of the Interim, Lon., 1548, 16mo, pp. 26, (see, also, Brit Reformers, ix.; John Rogers, by J. L. Chester, 63, 386-406,) and was the compiler of the first authorized English Bible, which he prepared from Tyndale's MSS, Coverdale's translation, and the fruits of his own elaborate researches, and published under the assumed name of Thomas Matthew. The Byble, which is all the holy Scripture in which are contained the Olde and Newe Testament truly and purely translated into English by Thomas Matthew, 1537, fol. Printed by Grafton and Whitchurch, either at Hamburg, Lubeck, Marlborow, or Paris. Copies are in the British Museum, Lambeth, Bodleian, St. Paul's, and other libraries. Sotheby's, June, 1822, £19 19s.; Denyer, 18, (front and concluding leaf MS.), £33 12s.; Sir M. M. Sykes, Pt. 1, 613, £78 15s., Duke of Sussex, (imperfect,) £22 10s.; Fletcher, May, 1845, (2 leaves of table and imprint MS., other leaves mended,) £105; Gardner, 1854, (Lea Wilson's copy,) £150; Sotheby's, Aug. 1857, £23. See Dibdin's Ames, iii. 434-36, his Ædes Althorp, i. 62-63, and his Lib. Comp., 30-31; Lea Wilson, No. 4; Cotton, 12, 277; Bibl. Harl., No. 156; Bp. Tomline's Chr. "How much of this Translation had been accomplished by Tyndale before his arrest, (in or about March, 1535,) and how much was done solely by Rogers, or how far the latter availed himself of the published labours of Coverdale, are questions that cannot now be satisfactorily or minutely answered. Apart from the labour of placing the text in a complete state and probably comparing every verse with the original, there was a vast amount of mental effort to be bestowed upon the marginal illustrations which he added, as well as upon the various Prefaces and other articles prefixed to the whole work and to individual portions of it. The Marginal Notes alone would fill a volume of considerable magnitude; and there is no reason to suppose that he had any immediate assistance in their preparation. One thing, therefore, may be said with entire certainty, that, if Rogers is not entitled to be regarded as the sole author of the first English Translation of the Bible, it may be claimed for him that he prepared and published the first general English Commentary upon it, and thus led the way for his numerous successors in that class of Biblical literature."—JOSEPH LEMUEL CHESTER. John Rogers the Compiler of the First Authorised Bible, the Pioneer of the English Reformation, and its First Martyr, Lon., 1861, 30, 46, 48.

Rogers also inserted in this Bible A table of the pryncypall matters contayned in the Byble, in whych the readers may finde and practyse many commune places. This occupyes 26 pp. Of this table the biographer just quoted remarks,

"As he was the author of the first general English Commentary upon the Bible, so was he also the author of the first English Concordance, and his claims to these titles can no longer be disregarded or disallowed."—Uta supra, 61

See, also, 134-139 for notices of other literary compositions attributed to Rogers. But, indeed, those who seek for a correct portraiture of the martyr must carefully examine the whole of Mr. Chester's excellent biography,—the first one which has done justice to its venerated subject, (see Proceed Mass. Hist Soc., 1860-62, 1862, 8vo, 486-99; Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 239,) and, with this book as a guide, he can profitably extend his researches to Foxe's Acts and Monuments, Strype's Cramer, and Biographia Britannica. See, also, Wordsworth's Eccles. Biog., Ritson's Bibl. Poet., 334, Brit. Reformers, ix.; Richmond's Fathers, iv. 459

"The persecutions began with Rogers, Prebendary of St. Paul's, a man eminent in his party for virtue as well as for learning. . . . He had a wife, whom he tenderly loved, and ten children."—HUME Hist of Eng, ch xxxvii.

The number of his children has been a fruitful cause of discussion, but Foxe, who knew the family well, is sufficiently explicit.

"His wife and children, being eleven in number,—ten able to go, and one sucking on her breast,—met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield."—Acts and Monuments

Rogers, indeed, told Lord-Chancellor Gardiner, "She hath ten children which are hers and mine," but the good man was confined for more than a year in Newgate, and his eleventh child arrived in his absence; or, if otherwise, the father of so many children may be excused for momentarily forgetting the new number.

Rogers, John, 1565?-1620, minister of Chacombe, Northamptonshire, 1587-1620, was probably a grandson of John Rogers the Martyr. Discourse on Christian Watchfulness—How to Live and How to Die, Lon., 1620, 8vo. Styled by Calamy a good book. See Chester's John Rogers, 1861, 274.

Rogers, John, a Puritan, Vicar of Hemmingham, 1592, minister of Haverhill, 1603, and afterwards minister of Dedham, England, d. 1630. It is the current belief in New England, where his descendants are numerous, that this divine was a grandson of John Rogers the Martyr; but Mr. Chester (John Rogers, 1861, 245-251) assures us that "there is no reasonable ground for supposing that he occupied that relation."

"Some years ago, Mr. Savage—behind whose authority in such matters it is seldom needful to look—expressed not his belief, but his knowledge, that not a family in America could trace its ancestry to John Rogers. Most, if not all, of his so-called descendants in this country are descended from Rev. Nathaniel Rogers, of Ipswich."—A. P. FEARNOT, D.D. *N. Amer. Rogers, Samuel, July 30, 1763-Dec. 18, 1855, the son of a London banker, and a lineal descendant by his mother of the learned and excellent Philip Henry, the father of the commentator, was born at Newington Green, a suburb of London.

"It is, no doubt, to his maternal descent," remarks his nephew, Mr. William Sharpe, "that he alludes in the following lines, introduced into the notes on the poem of Italy:

'What though his ancestors, early or late,
Were not ennobled by the breath of kings;
Yet in his veins was running at his birth
The blood of those most eminent of old
For wisdom, virtue—those who would renounce
The things of this world for their conscience' sake."

Mr. Sharpe continues:

"Although introduced when very young into his father's business, his love of poetry was shown early. Long before he was twenty, he had put upon paper many lines which afforded promise of his subsequent performances. His first published poem, the 'Ode to Superstition,' was begun before he was of age, and the 'Pleasures of Memory' appeared while he was still a working partner in the bank.

Having lost his father in 1793, whose death-bed he has touchingly alluded to in his 'Lines written in a Sick Chamber,' and having united with him in business his younger brother, Henry, he soon afterwards retired from all active management of the affairs of the banking-house, and never resumed it. He quitted his paternal residence at Newington Green, where he was born and had spent the whole of his early life, and, after living a short time in 'chambers' in the Temple, he removed, about 1803, to a house in St. James's Place, looking into the Green Park. This house he had altered and nearly rebuilt according to his own taste, and in it he resided until his death, on the 18th of December"—Preface to Recollections by Samuel Rogers, 1859.

To this biographical preface, and to several sources to be indicated below, we refer the indulgent student who is disposed to forgive in us that brevity of narrative which our limited space renders imperative. The many attractions of the "house in St. James's Place," referred to by Mr. Sharpe, were long familiar to many of our readers. That the well-known mansion lacked the greatest of all attractions—that a poet's wife sat not at the head of the poet's famous breakfast-table—would seem to have been the fault of the neglectful master himself.

"His own version of the nearest approximation to the nuptial tie was, that, when a young man, he admired and sedulously sought the society of the most beautiful girl he then and still thought he had ever seen. At the end of the London season, at a ball, she said, 'I go to-morrow to Worthing. Are you coming there?' He did not go. Some months afterwards, being at Ranelagh, he saw the attention of every one drawn towards a large party that had just entered, in the centre of which was a lady on the arm of her husband. Stepping forward to see this wonderful beauty, he found it was his love. She merely said, 'You never came to Worthing'."—Edinburgh Review, July, 1856.

And probably, if he had, he would have returned from "Worthing" as he went,—or not much enriched had he brought back a bride: certainly there seems to have been no heart-breaking on either side. It is possible, indeed, that the same want of confidence which kept the young poet from Dr. Johnson's presence when there was only a door between them—a door, too, which he had anxiously sought—may have kept the young lover from Worthing. But, leaving these unprofitable speculations, we proceed to an enumeration, chronologically arranged, of Mr. Rogers's publications, premising that they were preceded by a series of eight papers, entitled The Scribbler, which the curious will find in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1781, pp. 68, 119, 168, 208, 259, 305, 353, and 405. The first number is signed S* R*.

1. AN ODE TO SUPERSTITION, WITH SOME OTHER POEMS, Lon., 1786, 4to, pp. 26, 1s. 6d.

"I wrote it whilst in my teens, and afterwards touched it up. I paid down to the publisher £30, to insure him from being a loser by it. At the end of four years I found he had sold about twenty copies. However, I was consoled by reading in a critique on the Ode that I was 'an able writer,' or some such expression."

It was the critic of the Monthly Review (July,—not December, as has been asserted,—1786) who administered the healing balm.

"In these pieces," he remarks, "we perceive the hand of an able master. [Of two masters,—Dryden and Gray,—he might have said.] The Ode to Superstition is written with uncommon boldness of imagery and strength of diction. The rest of these pieces have the same character of chaste and classical elegance"—49, 51.

"It not only smacks of his peculiar genius," says Mr. Moir, "but is characterized by that elaboration for which all his subsequent writings are noted"—Sketches of the Poet's Life, &c., 3d ed., 1856, 48.

2. THE PLEASURES OF MEMORY, AND OTHER POEMS, 1792, 4to; 1793, 12mo; 1794, 12mo. 1795, 12mo, 1796, 12mo; 1798; illust. by Stothard, 1801, 12mo, (see Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 746-7; Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxiv. 170;) 1803; 1810, 12mo. Illustrations to, by Westall, 1825, 8vo; 1. p., imp. 4to. The Pleasures of Memory was reprinted in No. 4, infra, has been frequently republished, (last ed., with 20 designs, Lon., 1865, sm. 4to,) and is the first piece in the modern editions of Rogers's Poems, and Rogers's Poetical Works, some of which we shall have occasion to notice presently.

It will be remembered that in his English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, pub. in 1809, the noble critic pronounces The Pleasures of Memory, The Pleasures of Hope, and the Essay on Man "the most beautiful didactic poems in our language." This eulogy of the contemporary poet is not to be ascribed to the enthusiasm of friendship: it was two years later when Byron, Moore, Campbell, and Rogers met—it was at the table of the latter—for the first time. This dinner-party was graphically described by the host to Mr. Edward Everett, and by Mr. Everett the story was not unlocated, with other interesting particulars respecting Lord Byron, to the author of this Dictionary, by whom the narrative was given to the public in the life of Lord Byron in the first volume of this work.

"Melodious Rogers"—for so his lordship styled himself—was always a great favourite with the author of Childe Harold. In 1813 he dedicated to him his tale of The Quair, "as a slight but most sincere token of admiration for his genius, respect for his character, and gratitude for his friendship," in the same year he ranks him second only to Scott among living poets, and endorses the high estimate which Sir James Mackintosh (article on Rogers's Poems, 1812, 8vo, in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1813, places on the author of The Pleasures of Memory. See Byron's Diary, Nov. 27, 1813, in Moore's Life of Byron, vol. i.) and in the next year Byron's poem of Lara was published in the same volume (Lara, a Tale; Jacqueline, a Tale, 1814, 12mo) with Rogers's Jacqueline.

"The 'Pleasures of Memory,'" he remarked, nine years later, to Lady Blessington, "is a very beautiful poem, harmonious, finished, and chaste, it contains not a single metrical ornament. If Rogers has not fixed himself in the higher fields of Parnassus, he has, at least, cultivated a very pretty flower-garden at its base."—Conversations with Lord Byron, ed. Buxton, 1859, 831. See, also, 335.

"We are all wrong," he exclaimed, on another occasion, "except Rogers, Crabbe, and Campbell;" and his invocation, from which we have already borrowed two words, will be another repetition.

"And thou, melodious Rogers, rise at last!
Recall the pleasing memory of the past,
Arise! let blest remembrance still inspire
And strike to wonted tones thy hallowed lyre.
Restore Apollo to his vacant throne,
Assert thy country's honour and thine own."

We continue our quotations:

"It is not uninteresting, even as a matter of speculation, to observe the fortunes of a poem which, like the Pleasures of Memory, appeared at the commencement of this literary revolution, without paying court to the revolutionary tastes or seeking distinction by resistance to them. No production so popular was probably ever so little censured by criticism. It was approved by the critics as much as read and applauded by the people, and thus seemed to combine the applause of contemporaries with the suffrage of the representatives of Posterity."—Sir J. MACKINTOSH, Edin. Rev., Oct. 1813, 38, 39. repub. in his Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 112.

"Rogers's Pleasures of Memory has one good line,—

'The only pleasures we can call our own.'

"It is remarkable that this poem is very popular. A new edition of it is printed every year. It brings the author in about £200 per annum, and yet its principal merit is its finished versification, which one would think the people could hardly enjoy. The subject, however, recommends itself very much to all classes of readers."—Sir J. MACKINTOSH, Conversations with A. H. Everett, 1817. N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1832, 447, n.

"The Pleasures of Memory ends thus:

'Hail, Memory, hail! in thy exhaustless mine' . . .

[Quoted to last line inclusive.]

"These are the lines which Mackintosh, thereby giving the measure of his own poetic feeling, used to say were equal to the closing lines of the Dunciad."—Edin. Rev., July, 1856.

"There is the 'Pleasures of Memory,' an elegant, graceful, beautiful, pensive, and pathetic poem, which it does one's eyes good to gaze on, one's ears good to listen to, one's very fingers good to touch, so smooth is the versification and the wire-wove paper. Never will the 'Pleasures of Memory' be forgotten till the world is in its dotage."—PROFESSOR WILSON, Recollec. of Christopher North.

See, also, a favourable notice of The Pleasures of Memory in Blackw. Mag., iv. 553.

"The Pleasures of Memory, a poem exquisite in conception and execution, combining a fine feeling of nature and a high tone of morality, with elegant scholarship and a nicety of taste approaching to fastidiousness. . . . It is pervaded by beauty and grace of sentiment, and in versification approaches the perfection of art."—MORE, Sketches, &c.

"In the Pleasures of Memory we are forcibly reminded of Goldsmith and the Deserted Village. We feel how deeply the genius of that exquisite writer had affected the mind of Rogers in his youth. There is a striking similarity of style, of imagery, and of subject. . . . Out of the Pleasures of Memory sprang the Pleasures of Hope. The direct imitation of both style, manner, subject, and cast of subject, by Campbell, is one of the most striking things in the language, the peculiarities of the style and phraseology only, as was natural by an enthusiastic youth, much exaggerated."—HOWITT'S Homes and Haunts of the More Eminent British Poets, (q v)

"He is a very lady-like poet. He is an elegant but feeble writer. He wraps up obvious thoughts in a glittering cover of fine words, it is full of enigmas with no meaning to them; is scrupulously inverted, and scrupulously far-fetched; and his verses are poetry chiefly because no particle, line, or syllable of them reads like prose. . . . You cannot see the thought for the ambiguity of the language, the figure for the finery, the picture for the varnish. The whole is refined and frittered away into an appearance of the most evanescent brilliancy and tremulous imbecility. There is no other fault to be found with the Pleasures of Memory than a want of taste and genius."—MR. LITT, Lects. on the English Poets, Lect. VIII., (1818.)

See, also, Blackw. Mag., April, 1818, 72.

"Haslitt, with something of that perverseness which even talent is not without, said the chief fault of Rogers was want of genius and taste. Perhaps in the whole list of living men of genius no one can be named whose taste in poetry is so just and delicate."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM, Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years, (1833.)

See, also, Preface to Rejected Addresses; Pursuits of Lit., Dial. IV., Note 85, Lon. Quar. Rev., ix. 207, 212, 213, (by Lord Dudley); Blackw. Mag., xxx. 475, xxxviii. 146; Fraser's Mag., vii. 81; No. 4, infra.

A substantial advantage of the fame which followed the publication of The Pleasures of Memory was the acquisition of many valuable acquaintances; and of these no one was esteemed more highly by the poet than Charles James Fox, to whose memory he remained faithful every year and day of his prolonged life. Fox sat chief among the guests at the "house-warming dinner" when, in 1803, Rogers moved to his mansion in St James's Place; the poet celebrated the funeral of his illustrious friend "in some of the best-turned and most tender of his verses," in 1806, and thirteen years later (in the poem of Human Life) he pensively records the happy hours he had enjoyed with the patriot in the "loved retreat" where the genius of Shakespeare or of Dryden soothed the excitements of party and banished the demon of play.

3. AN EPISTLE TO A FRIEND, WITH OTHER POEMS, 1793, 4to. 4. POEMS INCLUDING FRAGMENTS OF A POEM CALLED THE VOYAGE OF COLUMBUS, 1812, 8vo, pp. 276. The first poem in this collection is our old friend The Pleasures of Memory: this poem was noticed in reviews of No. 4 by Mr. Ward (afterwards Lord Dudley) in Quarterly Review, March, 1813, (see, also, Dec. 1840, 96), and by Sir J. Mackintosh in Edinburgh Review, October, 1813. The Voyage of Columbus is praised with warmth and without deductions by the latter, moderately and with qualifications by the former. Rogers, who was by no means indifferent to adverse criticism, was foolish enough to be annoyed by Ward's freedom, and unwise enough to revenge himself for no injury by a tart epigram and an ill-natured witicism.

A complimentary reference to the Voyage of Columbus will be found in Prescott's History of the Conquest of Mexico, 23d ed., 1855, i. 313.

5. LARA, a Tale, [by Lord Byron, ut supra]; JACQUELINE, a Tale, 1814, 12mo; N. York, 1814, 12mo. In his review of Byron's Corsair and Lara, in the Quarterly Review, July, 1814, George Ellis expresses his surprise that the latter was "ushered into the world in company with the highly-refined, but somewhat insipid, pastoral tale of Jacqueline;" we regret to add that Rogers here again displayed his weakness by indignation, not carefully concealed, at the honest reviewer. We have already in very plain terms censured the school-boy petulance which so often disgraces critical authorship, (see JEFFREY, FRANCIS, p. 961, col. 1.) it occurs to us to quote a few lines, indicative of a very contrary spirit, from a letter addressed to us by a late eminent essayist and historian less than a twelvemonth before the world was called to mourn his sudden decease.

"Everybody has a right to blame me for what I have written; nor shall I ever complain of the freedom with which that right is exercised. MACAULAY.

"HOLLY LODGE, KENNINGTON,
"January 29, 1859."

How far beyond "the limits of becoming" criticism the assaults upon some of this writer's positions have been carried, the intelligent reader can hardly need to be informed.

"These are very sweet verses. They do not, indeed, stir the spirit like the strong lines of Byron, nor make our hearts dance within us, like the inspiring strains of Scott; but they come over us with a bewitching softness that, in certain moods, is still more delightful, and soothe the troubled spirits with a refreshing sense of truth, purity, and elegance."—LORD JEFFREY, Edin. Rev., March, 1819, 325-336. repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1853, 534-539. See, also, (notice of Jeffreys on Rogers,) Blackw. Mag., xxvii. 284.

"A most 'pathetic and moral poem;' as capable as any work of taste can be, of fixing the inattentive, of inspiring the ignoble, and of reforming the profligate, and adding a fresh treasure to the store-house of wisdom, and another bulwark to the citadel of virtue."—Lon. Month. Rev., March, 1819, 307-319.

"The impression made upon us by the perusal of Human Life is that of an agreeable melancholy. There are parts which excite deeper sensations; but the general tendency is of this delightful cast."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1819, 97-98.

"The poem itself is one of the most beautiful things in any language. It is human life from the cradle to the tomb, with all its pleasures, aspirations, trials, and triumphs. . . . Never either, were the varied scenes of English life more sweetly described."—Howitt: Homes and Haunts, &c.

"In it and by it, in our opinion, his genius, if not his fame, reached the culminating point . . . Nothing can be happier than the rapid introductory sketch of the four epochs,—the birth, the coming of age, the marriage, and the death of the proprietor of the old manor-house"—Edin. Rev., July, 1856.

8. ITALY; A POEM: Part the First, 1822, 12mo, pp. 164. Anon. Phila., 1823, 12mo.

"The name of the author of Italy is carefully guarded; but we think there can be little hesitation in ascribing it to Southey. . . The excellence so far outweighs the defects, that we must commend Italy as one of the sweetest and most pleasing little volumes published for a long period"—Lon Lit Gas, 1822, 33-34. See, also, 55.

Not so favourably noticed in Lon. Month. Rev., Aug. 1822, 438-442. 3d edit. of Part the First, Lon., 1823, 12mo. Italy; a Poem: Part the Second, 1828, 12mo, pp. 188.

The critic of the Literary Gazette (1828, 353-354) does not think that he should have mistaken the Second Part, if he did the First Part, of Italy for Southey's—he considers the continuation "inferior in power and interest" to the commencement. The Monthly Reviewer (1828, 398-400) has about as little to say in favour of the Second Part as he ventured respecting the First Part.

Parts First and Second, with alterations, illustrated with 56 engravings after Turner, Stothard, &c., were pub together in 1830, 8vo, l. p., 4to, some imp. 4to, again, 1831, 8vo, again, 1835, 8vo, and in 1836, (the poem was not finished until 1834,) 8vo, l. p., 4to, appeared the complete edition, with 56 engravings after Stothard, Prout, and Turner, engraved under the eye of the author at an expense to him of £10,000. This splendid volume was repub. in 1838, 4to, proofs, 42s., 1842, cr. 8vo, 16s., 1859, 8vo, 16s. (See Dr. Wynne's Private Libraries of New York, 1860, 57, Burton's Book-Hunter, etc., N York, 1863, 63.) Cheap editions were issued in 1848, fp. 8vo, 8s., 1852, 12mo, 5s.

To match the illustrated editions of Italy, (see WATTS, ALANIC ALEXANDER, No 6,) we have the splendid editions of Rogers's Poems, (also styled Rogers's Poetical Works, and the Pleasures of Memory, and other Poems,) with 72 engravings after Turner, Stothard, &c., illustrated at an expense to the author of £5000, 1834, 8vo, (some on thick paper), l. p., 4to, also, 1838, 4to; 1839, imp. 4to, proofs, 42s.; 1842, or 8vo, 16s.; 1859, 8vo, 16s. Of the illustrated editions of Italy and the Poems (the engravings are by Finden and Goodall) it is believed that more than 50,000 copies had been sold before 1847. Poetical Works, new ed., Routledge, 1868, 8vo, 31s. 6d.; l. p., 4to, 52s. 6d. Of the Poems there are also cheap editions 1848, fp. 8vo, 5s., 24mo, 3s. 6d. cloth, 2s. 6d. sewed, 1839, or 8vo, 1s. 6d.; 1856, 12mo, 9s.; 16mo, 5s., 1862, 3s. 6d., and illust., 5s., 1866, 12mo, 5s. We also notice the American editions of Rogers's Poems. Phila. Lea & Blanchard, 8vo; E. H. Butler & Co., illust., 8vo, also with Campbell's Pleasures of Hope, 8vo, Lippincott & Co., with the Poems of Campbell, J. Montgomery, H. Kirke White, and Lamb, 8vo, N. York, Leavitt & Allen, r. 24mo, Boston, Phillips, Sampson & Co., ed., with Biog Sketch and Notes, by Epes Sargent, (in Sargent's series of the Poets,) 1854, 12mo, (see Graham's Mag., July, 1854, 105;) new ed., 1860, 12mo; also with Campbell's Poems, and Memoir, 12mo. Selections from Rogers's Poems will be found in Knight's Half-Hours; Scrymgeour's Poetry, 1850; Griswold's Poets, Gems from the Poets, 1858; Coppée's Famous Poets, 1858; and other collections.

To return to Italy:

"It is indeed a delightful poem," remarks one of the most recent and one of the most intelligent of travellers in the classical land which Rogers has so well depicted, "a work of such perfect art that the art is nowhere seen; with just the right amount of personal feeling, with a warm sense of all that is attractive to a poet and a scholar in Italy, a generous judgment of all that is distasteful to an Englishman and a Protestant, and full of charming pictures which seem to demand those exquisite illustrations of Stothard and Turner with which they are so inseparably united in our minds. All his sketches of Venice are admirable,—bringing back the wonders of that unique city as freshly as the scenery of a last night's play."—HILLARD Six Months in Italy, 5th ed., 1855, 561.

"A work full of moral and descriptive sweetness, and written in the chastened tone of fine taste."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist of Europe, 4th ed., 1864, i. 177, n

"Italy," to our mind, is the freshest and finest of all the compositions of its author,—the one most unequivocally his own, and the one whose passages most frequently recur to mind, from their peculiar graces of style and language. . . . Whatever portion of the writings of Samuel Rogers may die, this tale cannot"—Mur's Sketches, &c.

10. RECOLLECTIONS BY SAMUEL ROGERS, Lon., 1859, 12mo, 2d ed., 1859, Bost, 12mo, two edits. in 1859. This volume, as already intimated, was edited by Mr. Rogers's nephew, Mr. William Sharpe

And here we must conclude,—but not without referring the reader who would know more of the Banker-Poet, his breakfasts and dinners, his exquisite rooms and his illustrious guests, his kind actions and his good-natured and ill-natured remarks, to the following sources, in addition to those already cited. British Gallery of Contemporary Portraits, complete, 1822, Lockhart's Life of Scott, chaps. lxi. lxxvi., T. Nor must we omit a most interesting work which has made its appearance within the last few months,—Autobiographical Recollections of Charles Robert Leslie, R.A., with an Introductory Memoir, containing Extracts from his Correspondence, by Tom Taylor, 1860, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"Rogers was the only man I have ever known," says Leslie, "who felt the beauties of art like an artist. He employed and always upheld Flaxman, Stothard, and Turner, when they were little appreciated by their countrymen. The proof of his superior judgment is to be found in the fact that there was nothing in his house which was not valuable. In most other collections, however fine, I have always seen something that betrayed a want of taste,—an indifferent picture, a copy passing for an original, or something vulgar in the way of ornament"—Ch. xi.

This will perhaps remind the reader of the eulogy of one of Rogers's earlier admirers:

"If you enter his house—his drawing-room—his library—yourself say,

'This is not the dwelling of a common mind'

There is not a gem, a coin, a book, thrown aside on his chimney-piece, his sofa, his table, that does not bespeak an almost fastidious elegance in the possessor"—LORE BYRON: Diary, Nov 22, 1813 Moore's Life of Byron, vol. i.

By all means read the graphic account of Rogers's pictures and other treasures, by Professor Waagen, of Berlin, in Howitt's Homes and Haunts, &c., vol. ii. Or see Waagen's Treasures of Art in Great Britain, 2d eu., 1854; and neglect not to secure Catalogue of the Celebrated Collection of Works of Art, the Property of Samuel Rogers, Esq., &c., 21 days' sale, by Christie and Manson, 1856, r. 8vo; and let this stand next on the shelf to the Strawberry Hill Catalogues.

"Rogers is the poet of home; his charm consists in painting the scenes of infancy—pourtraying the endearments of youth, and he is read by all with such pleasure in mature life, because he recalls ideas and revives images which all have known, but which have been almost forgotten, though not destroyed, by the cares and anxieties of life."—SIR ARTHUR ALISON. Hist. of Europe, 1815-1852, chap. v.

"One of our greatest poets and finest prose writers; who to this unstable fame adds the more imperishable renown of being also one of the most honourable men and most uncompromising friends of civil and religious liberty who have appeared in any age."—LORD BROUGHAM. States. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, i. 311.

This article has already lengthened beyond our intentions; but a transatlantic biographer of the host of the far-famed mansion in St. James's Place would scarcely be justified in the absence of any acknowledgment of the hospitality uniformly extended to travellers from the New World.

"A poet," says Mr Hayward, "who never let slip an opportunity of showing kindness to an American."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1840, 45.

"He was partial to Americans," is the comment of a late critic, "both out of gratitude for his popularity in the United States, and because they did not compel him to speak French, in which he never conversed fluently or at his ease."—Edin. Rev., July, 1856.

That Americans were not ungrateful for his munificent hospitality, will be certified by the hearts of many of our countrymen who read these lines.

"Here in the United States, as elsewhere," writes an American who had sat at the board in the St. James's Place mansion, "everybody thinks and speaks kindly of you. Indeed, if good wishes are roses, then you are always 'on a bed of heaped 'Alysian flowers'."—Daniel Webster to Samuel Rogers, Washington, Sept. 2, 1852, introducing Mr. Joseph R. Ingersoll, Minister of the United States, to the Court of St. James. Private Correspondence of Daniel Webster, 1857, ii. 551.

It was in the last days of the poet's life (June 12, 1855) that a presentation copy of the illustrated "Italy" on the table at Sunnyside led Washington Irving and the author of the present work to some reflections on the lengthened span of one to whom it was permitted for more than the ordinary term of human existence to test the promises of hope and the "Pleasures of Memory."

"He has enjoyed life," said Irving, "the feast is over; but he occasionally indulges in a 'breakfast' yet."

Rolle, Sir Henry, 1589-1656, a native of Heanton, Devonshire, entered Exeter College, Oxford, 1606, admitted a member of the Inner Temple, 1608, and M.P. for Callington, temp. James I. and Charles I., was made Sergeant-at-Law, 1640, a Judge of the King's Bench, 1645, and Lord Chief Justice of the same, 1648. He resigned his seat some time before his death, after which appeared:

1. Un Abridgment des Plusieurs Cases et Resolutions del Common Ley, Alphabetically Digest desouth several Titles, Lon., 1668, 2 vols. fol. In French. Pub. under the eye of Sir Matthew Hale, who contributed an excellent English Preface. See D'ANVERS, KNIGHT. Viner's Abridgment is based upon Rolle's, which has been commended with qualifications:

"I must deal plainly with the reader, and tell him that 1687 though this book is of excellent use and worth, yet it comes far short of the abilities and worth of him that compiled it, and therefore is an unequal monument of him."—SIR M. HALL Justice, (q. v.)

"I value him where he reports judgments and resolutions. But, otherwise, it is nothing but a collection of Year Books and little things noted when he made his Common Place Books. His private opinion must not warrant or controul us here."—TWISDEN, J. 1st Mod., 273

"A work excellent in its kind; and, in point of method, succinctness, legal precision, and many other respects, fit to be proposed as an example for other abridgments of the law."—HARGRAVE: Notes Ch. Lit., 9, a

"The chief advantage that it possesses over the earlier compilations is, in a more scientific arrangement of the materials, and a greater subdivision of the general heads, so as to bring together matters of the same nature or relative to the same branch, instead of heaping them up in one undistinguishing mass"—STORY, J. Miscell. Works, ed. 1852, 386-8, (see, also, 88.)

" . . . His Reports, as well as his Abridgment, (which is itself so full of cases not elsewhere reported as almost to rank with the Reports,) are both of them genuine works, and have always been deemed authoritative, although a very accurate Judge said to counsel, citing Rolle, that a good many cases which are reported by him are reported in other books, which do not always bear him out"—Wallace's Reports, 3d ed., 1856, 183

Rolle, Richard, of Hampole, Hampole, or Hampull, an eremite of the order of St. Augustine, a doctor of divinity, lived a solitary life, near the nuns of Hampole, four miles from Doncaster, Yorkshire. He died in 1848. 1. Rycharde Rolle Hermyte of Hampull in his Contemplacions of the Drede and Loue of God, &c., Lon., 1506, 4to. Towneley, Pt. 1, 739, £4 6s. 2. He was the author of a number of Latin theological tracts in prose and verse, some of which are still in MS. See (3) Richardus Hampolus, sive Pampolitanus, Anglo-Saxon. Eremita, Opuscula in Bibl. Max. Patr., xvi. 609, viz.: I. De Emendatione Peccatoris, II. Orationis Dominice Exegesis, III. Symboli Apostolici et Athanasii Enarratio; IV. Nominis Jesu Enumerum; V. De Incendio Amoris; VI. De Amore Summo, eodemque singulari. His principal pieces of English rhyme are: Paraphrases of part of the Book of Job, of the Lord's Prayer, of the Seven Penitential Psalms, and the Pricks of Conscience,—if, indeed, the latter be his, instead of a version by another of his Latin original, Stimulus Conscientie. From the Pricks of Conscience Warton gives large extracts, and awards small praise to the poet; but Mr. J. B. Yates, in the Archæologia, vol. xix. 314-335, 1821, (see, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1856, i. 90,) gives a long analysis of the poem, and commends the execution. See Warton's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, ii. 35-43, 368, iii. 84; Ritson's Bibl. Poet., 133.

"We take leave to say that those who know Richard Rolle's English only through his poetry do not at all know it in its power. His really vigorous English is prose, and of this scarce any has been printed"—REV. G. PRYER, of Waddington The Ecclesiastic, Jan. 1866, q. v. for a biographical sketch of Rolle,—some of whose prose works we trust that Mr. Perry will edit for the Early English Text Society.

2. Poemata: among the Scottish Latin Poets.

Rollock, Robert, 1555-1598, a native of the vicinity of Stirling, studied at St. Salvador's College, in the University of St. Andrew's, of which he was chosen Regent; from 1578 to 1582 was Professor of Philosophy, and in the winter of 1582-3 became Principal and Professor of Divinity, in the newly-erected University of Edinburgh. The life of this learned and excellent man by Robertson and Charteris has been already noticed, (ROBERTSON, GEORGE, supra;) see also, Rollock's Select Works, vol. i. (ut infra,) and references below. He was the author of the following Latin commentaries on the Scriptures. 1. Ephesios, Edin., 1590, 4to, Genev., 1593, 8vo. 2. Danielis, Edin., 1591, 4to; Andreap., 1594, 8vo, Genev., 1598, 8vo. 3. Romanos, Edin., 1594, 12mo; Genev., 1596, 8vo. 4. His Select Works, reprinted from the Original Editions, and edited by William M. Gunn, Esq., were pub. by the Wodrow Society, 2 vols. 8vo i., 1849; ii., 1844.

Vol. i. contains Preface, Principal Charteris's Narratio Vitæ, &c. of Rollock, with an English translation, Nos. 16, 13, 17, and 18, supra, and Sermons (7) in the Scottish Dialect. Vol. ii. contains No. 19, supra.

More than two hundred years since, an eminent Scottish historian bore testimony to the excellence of this writer, and expressed a desire to see his works collected:

"A rare Example of Holiness he was in his Life and his Death, albeit now dead, yet still preacheth by his learned Works, which it is pity should not be collected in one Volume and preserved to Posterity."—ANDRÉAS SPOTTSWOOD: Hist. of the Ch. and St. of Scot. Lib., vi. 454.

See, also, Mackenzie's Scotch Writers, iii. 433; Melchior Adam; Fuller's Abel Redivivus. Beza commended his commentaries.

Rolt, Col. On Moral Command, 3d ed., Lon., 1842, 8vo.

Rolt, Richard, 1724 or 1725–1770, supposed to have been a native of Shrewsbury, after losing his situation in the excise by joining the rebel army in 1745, lived for some time in Ireland, and subsequently resided in London, where he produced many books, two or three operas, more than a hundred cantatas, songs, &c. for the theatres, and numerous papers in the Universal Visitor (for which Christopher Smart also wrote) and other periodicals. Of his works, now forgotten, (see European Mag., 1803, Biog. Dramat.; Boswell's Johnson; Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxvi 353,) the following are among the most important: 1. Representation of the Conduct of the Several Powers of Europe engaged in the late War, 1739–48, Lon., 1749–50, 4 vols. 8vo; repub. in 8vo vols., 1766. 2. Memoirs of John Lindsay, Earl of Craufurd, 1753, 4to. 3. History of France, 1753, 4to; 1769, 12mo. 4. A New and Accurate History of South America—vol. i., 1755, (some 1756,) 8vo. Not continued. At the time of his death he was projecting a History of the British Empire in N. America, in 6 vols. 5. A New Dictionary of Trade and Commerce, 1756, fol. Preface by Dr. Johnson.

"[Boswell] asked him whether he knew much of Rolt, and of his work. 'Sir, (said he,) I never saw the man, and never read the book. The booksellers wanted a Preface to a Dictionary of Trade and Commerce. I knew very well what such a Dictionary should be, and I wrote a Preface accordingly.'"—Boswell's Johnson, anno 1760

"But Rolt and his condutors (if he had any) had no such knowledge, and therefore the preface is quite misplaced. . . . A wretched compilation, without learning or talent of any kind."—McCulloch's Lit. of Brit. Econ., 1845, 52

Romaine, Robert Dexter. The New Age of Gold; or, The Life and Adventures of, written by himself, Bost., 1856, 12mo.

Romaine, William, 1714–1795, a native of Hartlepool, Durham, educated at Hertford College and Christ Church, Oxford; ordained deacon, 1736, and priest, 1738; became Curate of Lee Trenchard, Devon, 1737, and of Banstead and Horton, Middlesex, 1738; attacked Warburton's Divine Legation of Moses in two sermons (The Divine Legation of Moses Demonstrated, and Future Rewards and Punishments proved to be the Sanctions of the Mosaic Dispensation) preached before the University of Oxford, 1739, whereby he became engaged in an epistolary controversy with that pugnacious and able scribe; from 1739 to 1747 was engaged in the preparation of a new edition of Calaneo's Concordantia Bibliorum Hebraicorum et Latinorum, which he pub., London, 1747 et seq., 4 vols. fol., (properly the 5th edit. of Rabbi Nathan's Meir Nethib, 1st ed., Venet., 1523, fol.) a useful work, but injured by Romaine's Hutchinsonian infusions and disfigured by many inaccuracies, (see Wadding, Luxe, No. 1.) Lecturer of St. George's, Botolph Lane, and St. Botolph's, Billingsgate, 1748; Lecturer of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, 1749 until his death; Assistant Morning Preacher at St. George's, Hanover Square, 1750–55, Professor of Astronomy in Gresham College, an office which he retained for only a short time, about 1752; married Miss Price, Feb. 1755; Curate and Morning Preacher at St. Olave's, Southwark, 1756–59; was refused the use of the University of Oxford pulpit after his sermon entitled "The Lord our Righteousness," preached in that place in 1757,—about which time he declined a call to St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, Morning Preacher at St. Bartholomew the Great, Smithfield, 1759; chosen Rector of St. Andrew Wardrobe and St. Ann's, Blackfriars, 1764,—an election which was disputed, but by the Court of Chancery confirmed in 1766. In the duties of this office he remained zealously employed until the day of his death, July 26th, 1795. The solemnities of the "inevitable hour" were cheered by a confident expectation of that blissful immortality which, during the many years of his zealous and laborious ministry and holy and beneficent life, he had ceased not to teach and preach to his people as the great object of earthly probation.

"In his last illness," observes Mr. Simpson, "not one fretful or murmuring word ever escaped his lips. 'I have,' said he, 'the peace of God in my heart. I knew before the doctrines I preached to be truths, but now I experience them to be blessings. Jesus is more precious than rubies, and all that can be desired on earth is not to be compared to him.' He was in the full possession of his mental powers to the last moment, and near his dissolution cried out, 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty! Glory be to thee on high for such peace on earth and good will to men!'"

The best-known of his works are:

1. Practical Commentaries, in Several Lects., on Ps. cvii., Lon., 1747, 1755, 1760, 1767, 8vo. An Answer was pub. 1755, 8vo. See Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 166. 2. The last edits. are with Preface by Owen, Lon., 1851, 12mo, 1856, 12mo; with Life of the Author, N. York, 1848, 12mo. The three are also pub. in his Minor Works, with Pref. by Dr. Thomas Chalmers, Glasg., 1822, 2 vols. r. 32mo; and the three, with Chalmers's Preface, in 1 vol. 12mo, also 24mo.

"Few books have been more circulated than his Treatises on Faith, which are full of evangelical and devotional statements."—Buckerseth's C. S., 4th ed., 320. See, also, Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 760

10. Letters to a Friend on the most Important Subjects, during a Correspondence of Twenty Years, (pub. by Thomas Wills,) Lon., 1795, 12mo, 1798, 12mo; 3d ed., 1803, 12mo. Repub. in 32mo and 12mo; with Pref. by Dr. Thomas Chalmers, 12mo; N. York, 12mo. See, also, Jones, Rev. Thomas, of Southwark. A collective edit. of Romaine's Works, with his Life by the Hon. and Rev. William Bromley Cadogan, (see the Life of the Countess of Huntingdon, ii. chap. xlix.) was pub. in 1796, 8 vols. 8vo, 2s.; fine paper, £3 3s., new edits., 1813, 6 vols. 8vo; 1821, 8 vols. 12mo, again in 12mo vols.; also, 1827, 8vo; 1840, 8vo, 1847, 8vo, 1850, 8vo.

"Romaine's Works are in a very practical and experimental strain. There is in them great sameness as to thought and expression, which nevertheless becomes interesting by the real importance of the subject, and by proceeding from a mind much impressed with it, they are plain truths, uttered from deep experience, and presented by the hands of faith and love."—Williams's C. P., 5th ed., 319.

* Romaine was a zealous Hutchinsonian, and this peculiarity of sentiment is discernible, more or less, in all his writings. His works, however, are full of piety and unction."—Loveland's Brit. Lib., 648. See, also, 780.

"Romaine, who died in 1796, was one of the earliest of those writers to whom we owe that revival of religion in our own country, of which we have been speaking. He had considerable learning, as well as remarkably clear evangelical views. . . . He was strongly attached to the Established Church."—Bickersteth's C., 4th ed., 830.

Romanis, William. Sermons at St. Mary's, Reading, Second Series, Camb., 1864, fp. 8vo.

Romans, Captain Bernard, a native of Holland, was employed in North America by the British Government, before the Revolution, as an engineer, and subsequently as a botanist in Florida. In 1775 he was engaged, it is supposed at the instance of Washington, by the New York Committee of Safety, as Engineer for the Construction of Defences in the Highlands. In 1776 he was commissioned Captain of Company of Pennsylvania Artillery, and he performed various services during the war. In 1776 he was introduced by Washington to Elizabeth Whiting, whom he married, (she survived until May 12, 1848,) and in the same year was taken prisoner and sent to England, where he remained until 1784, when he embarked for New York, but is supposed to have been murdered on the passage.

Romilly, Sir Samuel, M.P., 1757-1818, the son of Peter Romilly, an eminent London jeweller, whose father, a French Protestant, settled in London after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, entered himself at Gray's Inn, May, 1778, was called to the Bar in Easter Term, 1783, secured the friendship and patronage of Lord Lansdowne (who twice offered him a seat in Parliament) by his anonymous tract entitled A Fragment on the Constitutional Power and Duties of Juries, and at his lordship's instance published an anonymous pamphlet in answer to Martin Madan's Thoughts on Executive Justice, 1785, 12mo; King's Counsel, 1800; Chancellor of the County Palatine of Durham about 1805, and in this year, for the third time, declined a seat in Parliament, offered on this occasion by the Prince of Wales, (afterwards George IV.) Solicitor-General, knighted, and M.P. for Queenborough, 1806, laboured for many years in Parliament on behalf of the reform of criminal law, the abolition of slavery, and other philanthropical measures, and died by his own hand, in a fit of derangement caused by the loss of his wife, November 2, 1818. "It is a lesson composed entirely of facts, worth more than volumes of moral sentiments, to which none of those pretences, by which young people commonly reconcile themselves to their own nothingness, can be suggested as an answer."—M. DUMONT, of Geneva, to Sir S. Romilly's executor.

The "beautiful article on Codification," (Sir J. Mackintosh,) in the Edinburgh Review, xxix. 217, quoted from in our life of Jeremy Bentham, p. 169, supra, we owe to the pen of Sir Samuel Romilly.

SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY THE ORATOR.

"As Saturday drew near, my anxiety for Romilly's first public appearance had swallowed up every other concern. . . Romilly's success was as great as his friends predicted. He spoke for three hours and a half, and his speech might be named as the model of the simple style. . . The fact is, he kept every one chained to attention, and made the whole case [impeachment of Lord Melville] distinct to the dullest."—FRANCIS HORNER, May, 1806. Memoirs and Correspondence of F. Horner.

"Sir Samuel Romilly was a very effective speaker on the topics which he handled: he was a most acute reasoner—of extraordinary penetration and subtlety, with occasional appeals to sentiment, and addresses to the heart."—Sir E. E. Brydges's Recollections, 1825. See, also, Blackw. Mag., xvii. 514, Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1825, 502.

"His eloquence, never tame and subdued, was seldom fervid and impetuous, but it was sufficient at all times to give impressive utterance to the indignant and tortured feelings of a patriot who mourned the corruption of his age."—Lon. Month. Rev., Sept. 1820, 8.

"From the tenderness of his feelings, and from an anger never roused but by cruelty and baseness, as much as from his genius and his pure taste, sprung that original and characteristic eloquence which was the hope of the afflicted as well as the terror of the oppressor. If his oratory had not flowed so largely from this moral source, which years do not dry up, he would not perhaps have been the only example of an orator who, after the age of sixty, daily increased in polish, in vigour, and in splendour."—Sir J. MACKINTOSH, Second Falmouth Dissertation on Envy, Brit., 7th ed., vol. i. 378, n. See, also, Mackintosh's Works, ed. 1854, lii. 377, and Edin. Rev., xx. 362, (by Sir J. Mackintosh.)

SIR SAMUEL ROMILLY THE MAN.

"It is fit that no occasion on which Sir Samuel Romilly is named should ever be passed over without an attempt to record the virtues and endowments of so great and so good a man for the instruction of after-ages. Few persons have ever attained celebrity of name and exalted station, in any country, or in any age, with such unullulated purity of character, as this equally eminent and excellent person."—LORD BROUGHAM, Statesman's Geo. III., ed. 1856, i. 363-370, (q. v.)

"One whom I consider as among the wisest and most virtuous men of the present age."—Sir J. MACKINTOSH, Charge to Grand Jury of Bombay, 20th July, 1811 Works, ed. 1804, lii. 308. See, also, Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, ii. chap. i.

"The religion of Sir Samuel Romilly was, like his life, pure, fervent, and enlightened. Unclouded by superstition or intolerance, it shone forth in pious gratitude to God, and in charity to all mankind."—WILLIAM PETER, M.P., Life of Romilly, supra, No. 4.

"In all other respects we willingly offer our testimony—valiant quantum—to his great talents, large acquirements, and deserved success—to his social and domestic virtues—to his integrity, benevolence, and honour—and, in short, to the most essential qualities that constitute the character of a virtuous man."—J. Roper, Margaret, d. 1544, the eldest daughter of Sir Thomas More, p. 1361, supra, and the wife of William Roper, (infra) wrote two Declamations in English, which her father and she turned into Latin, composed an eloquent defence of the rich man whom Quintilian accuses of poisoning the poor man's bees, and drew up a treatise on the Four Last Things, which her father preferred to one of his own on the same subjects. Erasmus and Cardinal Pole were among the admirers of her learning. She has been credited with a translation by her daughter: see ROPER, MARY.

Roper, Mary, daughter of the preceding, and one of the Gentlewomen of Queen Mary's Privy Chamber, and, like her mother, famous for her learning, translated into English part of Sir Thomas More's Exposition of the Passion of our Saviour, and the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius from Greek into Latin. We presume that the latter would have been published had it not been for the appearance of Bishop John Christopher's version, (p. 381, supra.) Roscoe, Robert, third son of William Roscoe the historian, (infra), d. December, 1850, a member of the Bar, was the author of Alfred, an Epic Poem, and a number of minor poetical compositions.

Roscoe, Thomas, fifth son of William Roscoe the historian, well known as an author and translator, was b. near Liverpool, 1791. 1. Historical View of the Literature of the South of Europe, by J. C. L. Sismondi de Sismondi; trans. from the Original, with Notes and a Life of the Author, Lon., 1823, 4 vols. 8vo; 2d, 3d, and 4th eds., each in 2 vols. p. 8vo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib., v., vi.,) 1846, '50, '53; also, N. York, 2 vols. 12mo. The first edition of the French original—De la Littérature du Midi de l'Europe—was pub. at Paris, 1813, 4 vols. 8vo; the 3d, 1829, 4 vols. 8vo.

"A work written in that flowing and graceful style which distinguishes the author, and succeeding in all that it seems to give,—a pleasing and popular, yet not superficial nor unsatisfactory, account of the best authors in the Southern languages."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Preface to 1st ed.

"A work that will yet always be read for the beauty of its style and the richness and wisdom of its reflections."—TUCKERMAN: Hist. of Span. Lit., ed. 1863, i. 31, n., (q. v.)

See other notices of this work in Edin. Rev., xxv. 31, zell. 400; Lon. Mon. Rev., 1824, i. 251; South. Quar. Rev., xviii. 55; Prescott's Miscell., ed. 1855, 621, 635, n. 645, 660. Mr. Prescott considers that Sismondi, in what relates to Spain, helped himself rather too liberally ("macibus plenius") from Bouterwek. Read, in counceidea with this comment, Sismondi's first note to his first chapter vol. i.

But in Spanish literature we have now the invaluable history of Mr. George Ticknor, (q. v.) which is facile princeps in that department. Beside this work the scholar must place Diccionario Bibliographico Portuguez, &c., by Innocencio Francisco da Silva, of which vol. i. was pub., Lisbon, 1854, (see Lon. Athen., Aug. 13, 1859, 204,) and the 5th edit. of Brunet's Manuel, a work which merits the highest praise.

Let us linger a moment on the great name of Sismondi.

I. Histoire des Républiques Italiennes du Moyen-Age: 1st edit. was pub. at Paris, 1809-18, 16 vols. 8vo; also, 1818, 16 vols. 8vo; Paris and Bruxelles, 1826, 16 vols. 8vo; Bruxelles, 1838-39, 8 vols. r. 8vo; 1840, 10 vols. 8vo. The author pub. a smaller History of the Italian Republics in 1832, 2 vols. 8vo, an English version of which was pub. in a vol. in Lardner's Cab. Cyc., (see Blackw. Mag., xxxii. 518,) in which also appeared an English version of his Histoire de la Chute de l'Empire Romain, &c., 2 vols. Both of these works were in 1862 for sale by the Longmans. Notices of the large work will be found in Hallam's Middle Ages,—early edits., vol. i. 232, n., in the Supp. Notes of 1848, and in the Preface, notes at foot, and at conclusions of chapters, in the later edits.; Edin. Rev., xxv. 31, xxxv. 489, Quar. Rev., vii. 357; Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. VIII.; Prescott's Ferd. and Is., ed. 1856, ii. 328, iii. 190, n., 341; Prescott's Miscellaneous, ed. 1855, 307; N. Amer. Rev., xlv. 221, (by W. H. Gardiner), lxxiv. 372, (by Francis Bowen.) Nor must the student fail to add to this work the Famiglie Italiani Celebri, 9 vols. fol., Milan, 1819-52, and the other biographical publications of Count Pompeo Litta. (See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1853, i. 203, 1854, ii. 337.) See, also, The History of Italy, by Dr. Mommsen; The History of Italy, by Isaac Butt, 1860, 2 vols. demy 8vo; The History of Florence, by T. A. Trollope, 1865, 4 vols. 8vo; Social Aspects of the Italian Revolution, by Theodosia Trollope, 1861, p. 8vo.

II. Sismondi's Histoire des Français. 1st edit. was pub. at Paris, 1821-44, 31 vols. 8vo, £10 10s.; repub. Bruxelles, 1836-46, 22 vols. 8vo; 1846-47, 18 vols. 8vo, 1847-49, 18 vols. 8vo. This is recommended by Guizot as the best History of France. His treatment of England is considered candid and liberal. For notices of the work, see Edin. Rev., xxxv. 488, (by Sir J. Mackintosh,) For. Quar. Rev., iv. 1; Hallam's Middle Ages, Supp. Notes of 1848, and notes of later edits., Prescott's Ferd. and Is., ed. 1856, iii. 168, 397. We also commend to the attention of the reader the articles on Sismondi in Lon. Gent. Mag., Oct. 1842, 430, (Obituary,) For. Quar. Rev., xix. 251, Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxii. 299; Blackw. Mag., lvi. 529; N. Amer. Rev., lxi. 32, (by Francis Bowen.) Democrat. Rev., xx. 306. See, also, Lon. Athen., 1846, 1181. A notice of Sismondi will be found in Mrs Farrar's Recollections, Boston, 1866, 16mo. See, also, Lettres inédites de J. C. L. de Sismondi, &c., Paris, 1863.

We return to the enumeration of Mr. Roscoe's publications.

2. Memoirs of Benvenuto Cellini; written by Himself; trans., Lon., 1822, 2 vols. 8vo; 1823, 2 vols. 8vo; 1847 and 1850, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib., xiv.) N. York, 12mo. Also trans. into German by Gothe.

"More interesting than any novel I know."—HORACE WALPOLE.

See NUGENT, THOMAS, LL.D., No. 8.

3. French Wars in Spain, Phila., 1823, 8vo; 1827, 8vo. 4. Italian Novelists, Lon., 1825, 4 vols. 8vo; 1827, 4 vols. p. 8vo; 1836, 4 vols. p. 8vo. See Edin. Rev., xlii. 174, n., and Lon. Lit. Chron. These four vols., with Nos. 5 and 6, compose the 11 vols. of "Roscoe's European Novelists." 5. German Novelists, 1826, 4 vols. p. 8vo. See No. 4. 6. Spanish Novelists, 1832, 3 vols. p. 8vo. See No. 4. See Prescott's Ferd. and Is., ed. 1856, ii. 348. 7. Novelist's Library, with Biog. and Crit. Notices, 1831-33, 16 vols. 12mo: De Foe's Robinson Crusoe, 2 vols.; Smollett's Don Quixote, 3 vols.; Peregrine Pickle and Humphrey Clinker, 3 vols.; Smollett's Launcet Greaves, and Goldsmith's Vicar of Wakefield, 1 vol.; Fielding's Amelia, 2 vols.; Tom Jones, 2 vols.; Joseph Andrews, 1 vol.; Sterne's Tristram Shandy, 2 vols. See Lon. Quar. Rev. Roscoe also edited "complete editions" of the works of Fielding (see FIELDING, HENRY, Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 16; add 1866, r. 8vo) and of Smollett, (q. v.) 1845, med. 8vo; and an edit. of the Works of Swift, (q. v.) 1848, 2 vols. med. 8vo; 1856, 2 vols. imp. 8vo. His Memoirs of Fielding and Smollett are prefixed to Derby & Jackson's (N. York) editions of the works of the former in 4 vols. 12mo, and of the latter in 6 vols. 12mo. 8. Memoirs of Scipio de Ricci, &c., ed. from the Original of M. de Potter, 1828, (some 1829,) 2 vols. 8vo. Valuable for the history of the Romish Church in the 18th century. 9. Lanzi's History of Painting in Italy, 1828, 6 vols. 8vo, 1 p., imp. 8vo; 1847, 3 vols. p. 8vo, (Bohn's Stand. Lib., xvi., xix., xxiii.)

No more was pub.; though it was announced "to be completed in about six volumes, printed and illustrated uniformly with Miss Strickland's Lives of the Queens." 24. The Last of the Abencorages, and other Poems, 1850, p. 8vo.

Mr. Roscoe has also pub. The Fall of Granada, (repub. in Waldie's Library, vol. v., 1835,) contributed a Life of Michael Angelo to the Library of Useful Knowledge, (in Biography, vol. v.), and edited The Remembrance, and editions of his father's Life of Leo the X. See ROSCOE, WILLIAM, Nos. 11, 13. See, also, RITCHIE, LEITCH.

ROSCOE, WILLIAM, March 8, 1753-June 30, 1831, a native of Liverpool, where his father kept a public house and cultivated a market-garden, was at the age of six years placed under the tuition of a Mr Martin, whose intelligent preceptorship was effectually seconded by that home-influence which, in almost all cases, is so potent for weal or woe:

"To his care," says Roscoe, "and the instruction of a kind and affectionate mother, I believe I may safely attribute any good principles which may have appeared in my conduct during my future life. It is to her I owe the inculcation of those sentiments of humanity which became a principle in my mind. Nor did she neglect to supply me with such books as she thought would contribute to my literary improvement."

After some experience as a salesman of vegetables, the produce of his father's soil, in the Liverpool market, and a month's probation as a bookseller's apprentice, he was in 1769 articled for six years to an attorney and solicitor, devoting his spare hours to the perusal of Shenstone, Goldsmith, and others of the English classics; and to the knowledge of these he subsequently added an acquaintance with choice writers in the Greek, Latin, Spanish, Italian, and French languages. In 1773 he united with some other gentlemen in founding a society in Liverpool for the encouragement of the arts of painting and design, and he celebrated the occasion by an ode, which, after a separate publication at the time, was included in the same volume with a longer poem descriptive of an eminence overlooking his native town. (See No. 1, infra.)

His clerkship completed, in 1774 he was admitted an attorney of the Court of King's Bench; in 1781 he was married to Miss Jane Griffies; and in 1796, after twenty years' practice, he relinquished his profession, and retired to literary ease at Allerton Hall, (see ROSCOE, WILLIAM STANLEY, infra), a beautiful old manor, about six miles from Liverpool. And here it would have been his wisdom to have remained for the rest of his days, untrammelled with business, and no further occupied with external affairs than might have been necessary for the discharge of those philanthropic duties which no man can safely neglect, and which ever bore a prominent place in Roscoe's regard. But it was not so written: scarcely a twelvemonth had elapsed before he again became entangled in the things of this life. The skill displayed in the arrangement of the embarrassed affairs of the banking-house of his friends, the Clarkes, at Liverpool, was the introduction to an active partnership in that unfortunate establishment; and the end was ruin. But we anticipate. In 1806 he was returned to Parliament for Liverpool, and laboured zealously and effectually in his place for the preservation of national peace, the abolition of the slave-trade, and Catholic emancipation. His private correspondence best illustrates the active interest which he felt in the promotion of the welfare of society, and his recognition of the duty incumbent upon the educated and influential classes to labour for the welfare of those less favourably circumstanced. From 1812 to 1815 he varied his literary pursuits with philanthropic enterprises of this character, and not the least interesting of these were his discussions with Mr. Robert Owen, of Lanark, as to the best means of benefiting such as were disposed to profit by the aid and counsels of their advisers and adjutors. Towards the close of the latter year he was sternly called from these benevolent interpositions for others by the increasing difficulties of the banking-house in which he was interested,—difficulties which resulted in a suspension of payments on the 25th of January, 1816. Mr. Roscoe still hoped, by careful and judicious management, to retrieve the credit of his house; but his labours were in vain: disaster followed disaster, loss crowded upon loss, and the ruin was complete. But why linger on the painful record? He could not "command success;" but he did better: he showed that he "deserved it." He was found not unequal to the "uses of adversity." Not only was his property freely surrendered, but—here we shall do well to borrow the eloquent words of one of America's most eloquent writers:

"In view of such a state of things, he determined upon a sacrifice that can be duly estimated only by him who understands that fellow-feeling for the master-minds of our race, and the forms in which they have become familiar, which springs up and grows strong in the bosom where it is habitually cherished, by him who knows in its full measure the happiness of collecting about him the gems of literature and art, connecting them with associations of feeling and circumstance, gazing upon them as upon the face of friends, and into them as the oracles of truth; by him, in a word, the idea of whose usefulness, honour, and daily enjoyment is associated indissolubly in his own mind with books and products of art, not in their general aspect, but as they have been gathered by the slow accumulation of careful expenditure, and become endeared by years of blessed and ministering companionship in his own cheerful study"—Tuckerman's Characteristics of Literature, (First Series, 1849.) The Philanthropist: William Roscoe. Also in N. Amer. Rev., xii. 94-109.

But who that remembers the Sketch Book will forgive us if we fail to quote at least a few of those words of beauty and of power in which Washington Irving has embalmed the memory of William Roscoe?

"I was told of his being unfortunate in business. I could not pity him, as I heard some rich men do. I considered him far above the reach of my pity. Those who live only for the world, and in the world, may be cast down by the frowns of adversity, but a man like Roscoe is not to be overcome by the mutations of fortune. They do but drive him in upon the resources of his own mind, to the superior society of his own thoughts, which the best of men are apt sometimes to neglect and to roam abroad in search of less worthy associates. He is independent of the world around him. He lives with antiquity and with posterity with antiquity, in the sweet communion of studious retirement, and with posterity, in the generous aspirations after future renown. The solitude of such a mind is its state of highest enjoyment. It is then visited by those elevated meditations which are the proper aliment of noble souls, and are like manna sent from heaven in the wilderness of this world"—From the original, as copied by Jordan into the London Literary Gazette, Oct. 2, 1819, 635 see The Sketch Book.

Comments upon Irving's paper on Roscoe will be found in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxv. 52; Blackw. Mag., xii. 114; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 542.

This is a melancholy subject, to be sure; yet, as a bibliographer, we must not omit to call the attention of the collector to the Catalogue of the very Select and Valuable Library of William Roscoe, sold by Auction, Liverpool, 1816, 8vo. This catalogue was drawn up by his own hand. The Books were sold for £5150, the Prints for £1080, the Drawings for £738. For the fine portrait of Leo X., Mr. Coke of Holkham gave 500 guineas. See Dibdin's Bibliographical Decameron; Lon. Gent. Mag., Nov. 1816, 468. See, also, Roscoe's Library; or, Old Books and Old Times, by the Rev. James Aspinall, Liverpool, 1853, p. 8vo, with a head.

Mr. Roscoe survived his misfortunes more than sixteen years:

"And now the cares of active life were wellnigh ended, the partner of his days had gone before to her rest, and his feet were treading the declivity of life. He had put the finishing touch to an edition of Pope's works, [see POPE, ALEXANDER, supra.] and the Holkham Catalogue [in MS., of Mr. Coke's library] was completed; what remained then, for one who had so well sustained the burden and heat of the day, but that he should dedicate its close to recreative employment and repose? With his diminished resources increased by the grateful contributions of friendship, he accordingly released himself from all bustling or laborious employments, and passed into retirement. . . . The perception of physical beauty, the intelligent love of nature, the philanthropic spirit, the literary taste, which were the day-stars of his youth, continued their ministry in age, and the holier presence of domestic sympathies, of well-founded friendships, of blessed remembrances, was blending its cheerful influence with the deeper and more inspiring spirit of religion"—Tuckerman's Characteristics, ut supra.

In 1824 he was elected (the sixth Englishman who in the course of 273 years had been so honoured) a member of La Socio dell' Accademia della Crusca.

He died at Toxteth Park, Liverpool, in his seventy-ninth year. To the Memoirs of his Life, published in 1833, and to many notices of this work and of Mr. Roscoe's career, we have referred on a preceding page, (see ROSCOE, HENRY, No. 7.) and therefore we now immediately proceed to a history of his publications. 1. Mount Pleasant, a Descriptive Poem; also an Ode on the Institution of a Society of Art in Liverpool, Liverpool, 1777, 4to. Very rare. 2. The Wrongs of Africa, a Poem, 1787, 8vo. Pt. 2, 1788, 8vo. 3. A General View of the African Slave-Trade, 1788, 8vo. 4. A Scriptural Refutation of a Pamphlet lately published by the Rev. Raymond Harris on the Licitness of the Slave-Trade, 1788, 8vo. A 2d ed. was pub. by the London Abolition Committee.

"It is the work of a master," remarks his friend, Mr. Barton, "and by much the best answer Harris has received."

5. Unfold, Father Time! Thy Long Records Unfold! 1790. This favourite song was produced by Mr. Roscoe, at a meeting held in Liverpool, Dec. 14, 1790, to celebrate the taking of the Bastille. Nos. 6 and 7, very popular both in England and France, were produced on a similar occasion in 1791. 6. O'er the Vine-Covered Hills and Gay Regions of France, 1791. See No. 5. 7. Millions Be Free, 1791. See No. 5. 8. Strictures on Edmund Burke's Two Letters to a Member of Parliament on the French Revolution, 1791, 8vo. Of the French Revolution, as we have seen, Mr. Roscoe was an early and zealous supporter. Not satisfied with this attack upon Burke, he followed it up in a ballad entitled (9) The Life, Death and Wonderful Achievements of Edmund Burke, 1791. 10. War; a Poem, London, 1791, 4to. 11. The Life of Lorenzo de' Medici, called the Magnificent, Liverpool, 1795, 2 vols. 4to, some on thick paper, London, 1796, 2 vols. 4to. Mr. Roscoe had privately printed, as an avant-courreur to this work, in 1791, 12 copies of a small collection of the poems of Lorenzo, dedicated in Italian to the editor's friend, Mr. Clarke. In 1791, Liverpool, 4to, was issued Poesie di Lorenzo de' Medici, and in 1801, London, 2 Pts. 4to, appeared Poesie del Magnifico Lorenzo de' Medici e di altri suoi Amici contemporanei. Roscoe published the first edition of his Life of Lorenzo on his own account; shortly after its appearance he sold the copyright to Cadell & Davies for £1200. It was republished as follows: 2d ed., (so called, but really the 3d,) London, 1797, 2 vols. 4to; 3d ed., 1799, 2 vols. 4to; Basil, 1799, 4 vols. 8vo; 4th ed., London, 1800, 3 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1806, 3 vols. 8vo; 6th ed., revised by the author, 1825, 2 vols. 8vo; 7th ed., 1827, 2 vols. 8vo; 8th ed., improved, edited by Thomas Roscoe, 1845, 8vo. (H. G. Bohn;) and again, 9th ed., 1846, p. 8vo, and 10th ed., 1851, p. 8vo. (Bohn's Stand. Lib., vii.) an ed. in Bogue's Europ. Lib., Dec. 1845, p. 8vo; new ed., by T. Roscoe, 1865, demy 8vo. (Bohn's Eng. Gent. Lib.) Illustrations, Historical and Critical, of the Life of Lorenzo de' Medici, 1822, 4to and 8vo. This vol. (reviewed in Lon. Mon. Rev., Sept. 1822, 37-46,) in which the author replies to the animadversions of Sismondi in his Républiques Italiennes, and of other critics, is supplementary to all editions of Roscoe's Life of Lorenzo. Abroad, the Life of Lorenzo was pub. at Philadelphia in 1803, 3 vols. 8vo, and the edition was soon exhausted. It was pub. in Germany, trans. by Kurt Sprengel, Berlin, 1797, 8vo; in Italian, trans. by the Cavaliere Gaetano Mecherini, 1799; 2d ed., Pisa, 4 vols. 8vo. (Illustrations, in Italian, by V. P., Firenze, 1823, 2 vols. 8vo; in French, trans. by M. François Thurot, Paris, 1798, 2 vols. 8vo. See Brunet's Manuel, 5th ed., iv. (1863) 1392. Though thus popular, we have seen that it did not escape criticism; and the grounds of some of the exceptions taken to the work will be learned in the volume of Illustrations to which we have just called the reader's attention. Other notices of the work will be found in the periodicals of the day—the London Monthly Review, Aug. 1796, 427, Oct. 1796, 191, the British Critic, &c., the Lon. Quarterly Review, June, 1812, 265; Didkin's Lib. Comp., 539; Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. IX.; Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 4, 5, 11, 13, 65, and in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, ii 22; Lon. Athen., 1846, 680; Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 18.

We quote a few lines on each side:

"I am perhaps not so great a friend to Lorenzo as you, perhaps I may think, on some other points more closely connected with my pursuits, somewhat differently from you, but, take the whole together, there is no writer with whom, on all the various topics he treats, I coincide more heartily than with you. The style is, in my eyes, original, ample without being loquacious, pointed without being epigrammatic, and sententious without affectation."—Henry Fuseli to Roscoe, Life of Roscoe

"The complete volume has more than answered the expectations which in the sample had raised. The Grecian simplicity of the style is preserved throughout, the same judicious candour reigns in every page, and, without allowing yourself the liberty of indulging your own bias towards good or against criminal characters, which over-rigid critics prohibit, your artful candour compels your readers to think with you without seeming to take a part yourself. You have shown, from his own virtues, abilities, and heroic spirit, why Lorenzo deserved to have Mr. Roscoe for his historian. Several of his [Roscoe's] translations of Lorenzo are superior to the originals, and the verses more poetic."—Horace Walpole to Roscoe, April 4, 1796, Walpole's Letters, ed 1801, ix 45, 464, 455

"Roscoe is, I think, by far the best of our historians, both for beauty of style and for deep reflections, and his translations of poetry are equal to the original."—HORACE WALPOLE

"I cannot but congratulate the public upon this great and important addition to Classical History, which I regard as a phenomenon in literature, in every point of view. For my own part, I have not terms sufficient to express my admiration for his genius and erudition, or my gratitude for the amusement and information I have received. I shall not violate the dignity of the work by slight objections to some modes of expression, or even to a few words, or to some occasional sentiments, in the historian of a Republic, but I recommend it to our country as a work of unquestionable genius, and of uncommon merit. It adds the name of Roscoe to the very first rank of English classical historians."—Malthus's Pursuits of Lit., Dial III., Note 84

"The literary part of these histories," (Roscoe's Lives of Lorenzo de Med.) says Mr. Milman, "is executed with much elegance. The great political portion would require a firmer and more vigorous hand." An eminent critical scholar of the present day speaks in a letter penes me on this subject, "Wyttenbach's Life of Ruhnken, and Roscoe's Lives of the nursing fathers of reviving literature, I would place on the same shelf—they are very light reading on very grave subjects." See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1830, ii 337, and Milman's ed of Gibbon's Life, 1839, 8vo, 169.

"It is to be regretted that the accomplished biographer of Lorenzo de Medici should have taken no pains to inform himself of the most ordinary particulars in the constitution of Florence. Among other errors, he says," &c.—Hallam's Europe in the Middle Ages, 10th ed, 1853, i 426, n

"It is singular that Mr. Roscoe should refer the first appearance of the Medici in history, as he seems to do, to the siege of Scarperia in 1351."—Ibid., 496, n.

But, as an introduction to Roscoe's Lorenzo de Medici, read Shepherd's Life of Poggio Bracciolini, which is for the literary history of Italy in the earlier part of the 15th century what Roscoe's Lorenzo is for the latter. (See Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, i. 86, n.) Nor must Tenhove's Memoirs of the House of Medici, Sismondi's Républiques Italiennes, nor Napier's Florentine History be neglected by the student of Italian history. Month. Rev., Oct. 1797, 205, will be found a notice of a volume by William Rough,—Lorenzino di Medici, and other Poems, the principal piece of which seems to have been inspired by Roscoe's history. "Mr. Roscoe had just about this time published a translation from the Baba of Luigi Tansillo—a series of drollish lines, with the moral purpose of persuading young women to suckle their own children."—De Quincey's Lit. Remains, chap. 1.

"I read Tansillo, and was delighted with his tenderness, his just indignation, his deep observations upon character, his earnest and most expressive expostulation. A mother I am not; and yet, if I were, and had sinned against his laws, such a monitor would have awakened me to repentance."—DR. PARR.

Henri, 2d ed., Paris, 1813, 4 vols. 8vo, in Italian, Vita e Pontificato di Leone X. di Guglielmo Roscoe, tradotto e corredato di Annotazioni ed altri Documenti inediti dal Conte Luigi Bossi Milanese, (supporting sundry passages in the Life of Lorenzo against Roscoe's critics,) Milan, 1816–17, 12 vols. 8vo.

To the charge of wearisome prolixity urged against his life of Leo X., Roscoe replied to the effect that the fault was in the character of the materials of which his history was necessarily composed. And we must indeed admit that it is not in the power of man to invest some historical documents with the attractions of a "Persian tale." The work was castigated with an unsparring hand by Malcolm Laing in the Edinburgh Review for January, 1806, 336–358, (the critic is especially indignant at the historian's defence of Lucretia Borgia,) but received much kinder treatment from Robert Southey in the Annual Review for 1805, 449–467.

"The peculiar excellence of Mr. Roscoe's work," concludes Mr. Southey, "is the admirable rectitude of mind which it everywhere and always evinces, and which distinguishes him above all other historians."—467

Of course our pompous little critic who in his notice of Tansillo's Nurse has just informed us that "a mother he is not," was ready to celebrate the birth of his friend's last-born intellectual offspring by a few paragraphs of sonorous Johnsonese.

"You have thrown the clearest and fullest light upon a period most interesting to every scholar. You have produced much that was unknown, and to that which was known you have given perspicuity, order, and grace."—DR. PARR'S Letter to Mr. Roscoe

The Quarterly reviewer, who had little to say for the Life of Lorenzo, finds even less to praise in Leo X.:

"The second great attempt of our author on Italian history proved by no means equally successful. Its faults were external, its virtues less, and, by a singular infelicity, though it discovered few tokens of spirit or genius, it could still less lay claim to the praise of correct composition. Yet the positive delinquencies which deformed the history of Leo the Tenth were protected from observation by the negative fault of dullness. It was screened by clouds of its own raising, and the literary character of Mr. Roscoe still continues to be estimated by his first and best performance, excepting indeed as far as another and more popular test has been furnished by his verses, some of which possess considerable merit."—Lon. Quar. Rev., June, 1812, 265.

We quote the following animadversion,—instar omnium,—with the suggestion that it is only fair to examine how far the historian has been enabled to fortify his original positions, and to what extent he has been endorsed by other authors:

"It is much to be regretted that Roscoe in his Life of Lorenzo de Medici and his History of the Pontificate of Leo X. seems to have studiously glossed over the implety and licentiousness of the most distinguished of those periods, and rather endeavored to render them attractive, than to excite that abhorrence and disgust which a faithful delineation of their principles and practice could hardly fail to produce."—BISHOP VAN MILDRETT.

Our last quotation shall be from a countryman of our own, who to his many scholarly acquisitions added an intimate acquaintance with the literature and history of Italy:

"In the present age of intellectual activity, attention is so generally bestowed on all modern languages which are ennobled by a literature, that it is not singular an acquaintance with the Italian in particular should be widely diffused. Great praise, however, is due to the labours of Mr. Roscoe. There can be little doubt that his elaborate biographies of the Medici, which contain as much literary criticism as historical narrative, have mainly contributed to the promotion of these studies among his countrymen. These works have of late met with much flippant criticism in some of their leading journals. In Italy they have been translated, are now cited as authorities, and have received the most encomiastic notices from several eminent scholars. These facts afford conclusive testimony of their merits."—Wm. H. Prescott, the historian: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1824, 840; and in his Miscellaneous, ed. 1855, 412. In the same periodical for April, 1851, Mr. Roscoe is characterized as "the weakest of all political writers and speakers." Mr. De Quincey (Lit. Reminis., vol. i. chap. i.) does not disguise his surprise at Mr. Fox's high estimate of the power of Roscoe's political pen, and declares that "the rest of the world wondered at his presumption, or at his gross miscalculation of his own peculiar powers."

He also wrote the preface to Daubly's Catalogue of the Etchings of Rembrandt, (see DAUBLY, DANIEL;) contributed the descriptions to the Italian views in Prout's Landscape Annual, and A Tribute to the Memory of Richard Reynolds, (g. v.) pub. in Verses to the Memory of Richard Reynolds, N. York, 1817, 4to. Nor must we omit to mention that there has been recently pub. a small volume entitled (26) The Poetical Works of William Roscoe,

First Collected Edition, Lon., 1857, sq. 16mo, pp. 104. It is as a poet that, as we have seen on a preceding page, the Quarterly Reviewer (vol. vii. 266) is disposed to make the largest concessions to the admirers of Mr. Roscoe. On the same theme a highly respectable critic remarks,

"The poetical talents of Roscoe have been praised by no mean judges. His verses are very fair specimens of that kind of poetry the excellence of which consists less in strength of wing than in beauty of plume and lightness of movement. His song is flowing and harmonious rather than energetic."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years.

But see Roscoe, WILLIAM STANLEY, (quotation from Lon. Athen., April 7, 1860, 471.)

Of his prose style, the same critic observes,

"His principal fault is want of original force of thought; he never surprises us with ideas either high or profound; his eye sees but a little way, and loves the ground, he is ever equal, ever tranquil, and neither rises nor falls. He discusses the merits of a medal in the same quiet, gentle way that he discourses of the awakening energies of the Reformation. . . . In short, his style is more remarkable for weakness than force,—for being 'Florentine and slender,' rather than weighty and colossal."—Ibid

A distinguished foreign commentator on English historians, whilst admitting great merits in, has much fault to find with, the narration of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire; but he concludes with a query not very flattering to the biographer of Lorenzo and Leo.

"With all the abundance of his Italian elegance, what is the overloaded and affected Roscoe when compared with Gibbon?"—FRED. VON SCHLEGEL: Lects on the Hist. of Lit., Lect. XIV., English trans.

Speaking of the style of Burnet's Own Times, Charles Lamb remarks,

"None of Mr. Roscoe's sage remarks, all so apposite, and coming in so clever, lest the reader should have had the trouble of drawing an inference."—Lamb's Letters

Other notices of Roscoe and his works, in addition to the many already cited, will be found in Cunningham's Biog. Hist. of Eng., viii. 391-404; Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., xix. 472, (by T. S. The passages last cited, it will be noticed, refer to Roscoe's editions of the Works of Alexander Pope and the controversy thence resulting. These topics have been already treated on, and perhaps at a length quite sufficient to satisfy the reader, in our Life of the Bard of Twickenham, (POPE, ALEXANDER, supra.) See, also, BOWLES, REV. WILLIAM LITTLE, VAUX, ROBERTS, Nos. 6, 7. It will be observed that three of Mr. Roscoe's sons,—Henry, Thomas, and William Stanley,—one of his grandsons, William Caldwell, one of his grandsons' wives, Mrs. Henry Roscoe, and one of his granddaughters, Mrs. Henry Roscoe Sandbach, have a place among the authors of this Dictionary.

Roscoe, William Caldwell, b. 1823, and a graduate of the London University, was a son of William Stanley Roscoe, (infra) and a grandson of William Roscoe the historian, (supra.) Poems and Essays by the late William Caldwell Roscoe, edited, with a Prefatory Memoir, by his Brother-in-Law, Richard Rolt Hutton, Lon., 1860, 2 vols. p. 8vo, pp. 1020. Vol. i. contains Elduke, Count of Yveloe, and another tragedy, sonnets, and poems, vol. ii. consists wholly of essays originally pub. in the Nat. Rev. (edited by R. H. Hutton, the biographer) and other periodicals. Notices of these vols. will be found in Colburn's New Month. Mag., 1860, 187, Sat. Rev., 1860, 439, Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 471.

Roscoe, William Stanley, d. at Liverpool, Oct. 31, 1843, aged 61, eldest son of William Roscoe the historian, and father of the preceding, was educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, and subsequently was admitted a partner in his father's banking-house. During the latter years of his life he held the office of Sergeant-at-Law to the Court of Passage at Liverpool. He was acquainted with several languages, and well versed in Italian literature. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1844, i. 96, (Obituary.) He published a vol. of poems in 1834, 12mo.

"We cannot doubt for a moment that the specimens we have now given have justified all we have said of this writer's taste, sensibility, and fancy; nor do we hesitate to say that they show he is a man of genius."—Blackw. Mag., Feb. 1835, 163-160, g. v. for his exquisite lines, "To a Deserted Country-Seat," ("Allerton Hall," no doubt.)

Rose, Rt. Hon. George, M.P., 1744-1818, a native of Brechin, shire of Angus, Scotland, was first a surgeon's apprentice, then a purser in the navy, and afterwards Keeper of the Records. After superintending the publication of Doomsday Book, he was in 1767 appointed to complete the Journals of the House of Lords, in 31 vols. folio, for which he was handsomely paid. He was Clerk of the Parliaments, and for half a century, with the exception of two short intervals, "a sort of ministerial fixture, carrying on the routine of public offices, with many useful plans and objects of a subordinate nature." On the accession of the Addington administration, in 1801, and afterwards on the formation of that of the "Talents" in 1806, he retired with Mr. Pitt, but resumed the public service in both cases on the restoration of the Tories; became Vice-President, and soon afterwards President, of the Board of Trade, (which office he held at the time of his death,) and Treasurer of the Navy. 1. A Report on the Records, 2. The Proposed System of Trade with Ireland Explained, Lon., 1785, 8vo. Other publications of Mr. Rose have been already noticed see BENTHAM, JEREMY; MIDDLETON, THOMAS FANCHAW, D.D.; PARKHURST, JOHN, No. 3; PUSEY, EDWARD BOUVIER, D.D., No. 1. In 1832 he started and became editor of the British Magazine; in 1836 he succeeded Mr. Smedley as editor of the Encyclopædia Metropolitana; he was joint editor with Archdeacon W. R. Lyall (see p. 1145, supra) of the Theological Library; he criticised Hone's apocryphal New Testament in the Quarterly Review, (see HONE, WILLIAM,) and "projected and partly arranged" the following work, published after his decease,—vol. i. edited by the Rev. Henry John Rose,—22. A New General Biographical Dictionary, 1839–47, 12 vols. 8vo; also, each time in 12 vols. 8vo, 1848; 1850, 1853, £5 8s.; 1856, 1857.

"It contains notices of no fewer than 20,700 names, the most remarkable of which are treated at a length fully commensurate with their importance. . . Chalmers containing less than 9000 names, a number of which are utterly insignificant"—Adversament, vol. i.

Nos. 1 and 2 were severely censured by Bolton Corney in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1839, ii. 154, 158, 346–51. J. O. Halliwell responded in same vol., 463–64, and Mr. Corney rejoined. see 592–94. A notice (by "A Correspondent") of Parts 1–4, being vol. i., commendatory, but with qualifications, appeared in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1840, i. 497–501. This aroused Bolton Corney again, who sharply criticised Part 5, in same periodical, 585–91. Part 13 (1842) was attacked in The Archaeologist, March, 1842, 18, but merit is allowed in several of the preceding Parts. We shall only say that the work can now (1860) be had for about £4, and that it is well worth the money, or more. In vol. xi. 387–88 will be found a notice of Mr. Hugh James Rose, and another biographical sketch of this learned divine occurs in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1839, i. 319–22.

Rose, William Stewart, d. 1843, aged 68, well known to the readers of Lookhart's Life of Scott and the lovers of Berni and Ariosto, has recently been commemorated in a Memoir prefixed by his friend of many years the Rev. Charles Townsend, to Bohn's edition of the Ariosto, (see No. 7, infra), to which we refer the inquirer. 1. Naval History of the Late War, Lon., vol. i., 1802, 8vo. 2. Amadis de Gaul, a Poem in Three Books: Freely translated from the First Part of the French Version of Nicolas de Herberay, Sieur des Essars; with Notes, 1803, or. 8vo. This and Southey's prose version of Amadis from the Spanish of G. de Montalvo, 1803, 4 vols. 12mo, were reviewed by Sir W. Scott (his first contribution) in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1803, 109-136. Sir Walter remarks,

"But, if Mr. Rose's plan prevented him from aspiring to the higher flights of poetry, he never, on the other hand, disgusts the reader by sinking into bathos"—136

3. Partenopex of Blois; a Romance in Four Cantos: Freely translated from the French of M. Le Grand; with Notes, 1807, (some 1808,) 4to. Illustrated by Smirke.

"We think it executed with great taste and spirit, as the extracts which we have given will exemplify. The leading blemish of this poem is an ill-judged affectation of old language"—HENRY HALLAM Edin. Rev., Jan 1809, 418-426.

"A highly amusing publication"—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1819, 162. "Much curious information"—Hillard's Six Months in Italy, 5th ed., 1855, 552.

See, also, T. Moore's Memoirs, ii. 287; No. 6, infra. 6. The Orlando Innamorato, translated into Prose from the Italian of Francesco Berni, and interspersed with Extracts in the same Stanza as the Original, Edin. and Lon., 1823, p. 8vo. This and No 7 were reviewed by Wm H. Prescott in N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1824, 3-37-389; repub. in his Miscell., ed. 1855, 410-485.

Mr Prescott remarks, "The translations have been noticed in several of the English journals, and we perfectly accord with the favorable opinion of them, which has been so often expressed that it needs not here be repeated"—Miscell., 486.

This translation from Berni, intended as a preface to No 7, is highly commended in Blackw. Mag., March, 1823, 299-307, where also Rose's verses in The Court and Parliament of Beasts, and in No 5, supra, are also praised. See, also, Oct. 1833, 532. 7. The Orlando Furioso, translated into English Verse from the Italian of Ludovico Ariosto, with Notes, Lon., 1823-31, 8 vols. p. 8vo, £3 16s., new ed., with short Memoir of the Translator, by Charles Townsend, 1858, 2 vols. p. 8vo, (Bohn's Illust. Lib.) Four years before the appearance of the first vol of this translation, or its precursor, (No 6,) Moore notes in his Diary (April 14, 1819) a report that "Murray has offered Stewart Rose 2000*l.* for a translation of Ariosto." (Memoirs, ii. 290. See, also, iv. 301, v. 102.)

"Never was such close, scrupulous fidelity of rendering associated with such light, dancing elegance of language. This, indeed, will be an addition to the standard literature of our country"—Blackw. Mag., July, 1823, 30. review of vol 1, cantos 1-vi.

"We have discovered new merits here"—Ibid., April, 1824, 418. review of vol ii.

"The version before us of the first six cantos, we scruple not to say, is eminently faithful. . . . The brilliant passages of Ariosto, his 'purpurei panni,' have now justice done them for the first time"—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct 1823, 53, 56. review of vol. i.

But the critic finds some fault with the translator; and Timothy Tinkler (Blackw. Mag., May, 1824, 564) finds fault with the critic. The Sketcher, No. IV., (Blackw. Mag., Oct. 1833, 532,) remarks,

"I cannot but think Mr. Rose's translation of Ariosto a little too flippant—though I confess I have not read more than half a dozen cantos—and falls most in the poetical passages."

The latest critic observes,

"This translation is generally admitted to be the best that has appeared, and in this popular form [Bohn's Illust. Lib., 1858, &c., ut supra] will go far towards making the reading public as familiar with Ariosto as they can ever hope to become by means of a translation."—Lon. Gent. Mag., July, 1858, 72. See, also, 1846, i. 228, n.

9. Rhymes, 1837, 12mo.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Rose has condescended to take the hint which we offered a year ago in a short article on his Epistle to Mr. Frere, and collected that elegant piece, and some others not unworthy of being classed with it, into a volume."—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1837, 465, where the Dean of Badajoz is given.

Next in merit to this poem the critic ranks The Talis- man and Gundimore,—a description of Mr. Rose's Italian villa on the shore of Hampshire.

It thus commences:

"Acta, Denique cano, cœli qui primus ab oris

Ross, Alexander, one of the ministers of St. Nicholas Church, Aberdeen, 1636, d. 1639; pub. a Consolatorie Sermon on the Death of Bishop Patrick Forbes, 1635, which will be found in Forbes's Funerals, 1635, 4to, 149–178.

Ross, Alexander, 1699–1784, a native of Aberdeenshire, educated at Marischal College, after acting as private tutor in the family of Sir William Forbes, taught school at Aboyne and Laurencekirk, and in 1732 became the schoolmaster at Lochlee in Angus, which situation he retained for the rest of his life. From his 16th year he was a writer of verses; but it was not until his 69th year that he made his appearance in print. In 1768 was pub., under the eye of Dr. James Beattie, (p. 146, supra), who selected the poems from Ross's MSS. The Fortunate Shepherdess, a Pastoral Tale in the Scottish Dialect, to which are added a few Songs by the Author, Aberdeen, 4to, pp. 150. Prefixed is a humorous poem, in the broad Scottish dialect, addressed by Dr. Beattie to the author. The volume is generally known by the title of Helenore, or, The Fortunate Shepherdess. The 2d edit. was pub., Edin., 1778; the 3d, Aberdeen, 1787, 8vo; the 4th, Edin., 1804; and the 5th, Dundee, 1812, sm. 8vo. To the last ed. is prefixed a Memoir of the author, by his grandson, the Rev. Alexander Thomson, minister of Lenrathen. A notice founded upon this Memoir, &c. will be found in Chambers's and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Em. Scots., ed. 1835, iv. 198. Besides the five edits. noticed above, there have been many on coarse paper, for sale in the north of Scotland, of which that of Aberdeen, issued in 1826, is believed to be the last. The Fortunate Shepherdess was admired by Burns, Blacklock, and Pinkerton; and to this day, in Aberdeenshire, Angus, the Mearns, and Moray, it rivals in popular favour the poems of Burns and the Pilgrim's Progress; whilst Wood's Married and A', and The Rook and the Wee Pickle Tow, and other songs of the author, maintain their ground on their native soil. Ross left eight volumes of unpublished works, of which an account will be found in Campbell's Introduction to the History of Poetry in Scotland, 272–284.

Ross, Alexander, for fifteen years a resident in the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company, has given us the results of his observations in the following works: 1. Adventures of the First Settlers on the Oregon or Columbia River: Being a Narrative of the Expedition fitted out by John Jacob Astor to establish the "Pacific Fur Company," with an Account of some Indian Tribes on the Coast of the Pacific, Lon., 1849, p. 8vo. This must be read in connection with Irving's Astoria and the

"The volume abounds in matter of interest."—Lon. Athen., 1856, 1214

"His works give the only extant modern account of a region which is now attracting the attention of the civilized world."—Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1856

But see Irving's Astoria, his Adventures of Captain Bonneville, and other works on this "region." See, also, the Spectator's notice of No. 3. We know not whether to ascribe to this gentleman a book issued by his publishers entitled (4) Selma, a Tale of the Sixth Crusade, by Alexander Ross, p. 8vo.

Ross, Charles, is a son of General Ross, who was Colonel of the 59th Regt., and Governor of Fort George, at one time aide-de-camp to Marquis Cornwallis, and through life his intimate friend. Correspondence of Charles, First Marquis Cornwallis, [see p. 430, supra] Edited, with Notes, Lon., 3 vols. 8vo, Jan. 1859, 2d ed., Oct. 1859. These vols., edited from the family papers, throw much light on the Marquis's services in America, his Administrations in India and Ireland, and his diplomatic experience at Amiens.

Ross, Sir James Clarke, Knt., Captain R.N., D.C.L., son of George Ross, Esq., and nephew of the late Sir John Ross, (n/r/a.), was b. in London, April 15, 1800; in 1812 entered the Royal Navy on board the Briseis, commanded by his uncle, continued to serve under him in other ships, and accompanied him on his first North-west Expedition, 1818; from Jan. 1819 to Oct. 1825 was engaged under Capt. Parry in his three voyages in search of a North-west passage, and in 1827 again accompanied Parry in his attempt to reach the North Pole; from 1829 to 1833 served under his uncle in his Second North-west Expedition, and had the honour of discovering the true position of the North Magnetic Pole, (see Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1835, 3, by Sir J. Barrow; N. Amer. Rev., April, 1855, 317, by Augustus Woodbury; T. Moore's Memoirs, vii. 6; Ross, Sir JOHN, Knt., No. 4.)

in 1835 carried relief to a number of ice-bound whalers in Baffin's Bay, and was subsequently, until 1838, employed by the Admiralty in making a magnetic survey of Great Britain and Ireland; from Sept. 30, 1839, to Sept. 4, 1843, commanded an expedition, (ships Erebus and Terror), chiefly for magnetic investigation, to the Antarctic Seas, and made three attempts to reach the South Pole, (see A Voyage, &c., n/r/a.), Jan. 31, 1848, was appointed to the Enterprise, and made an unsuccessful voyage to Baffin's Bay in search of Sir John Franklin see FRANKLIN, Sir JOHN, Knt., ELISHA KENT, M.D., and notices of other North-west Expeditions, in this Dictionary. In A Narrative of the Discovery of the Fate of Sir John Franklin, &c., by Capt. McClintock, 1859, and in Arctic Regions, by P. L. Simmonds, new ed., 1859, 12mo, the reader will find much to interest him. The contributions to scientific knowledge of this eminent explorer (who is versed in astronomy, magnetism, meteorology, zoology, botany, and other sciences) have been warmly acknowledged and partially, at least, rewarded: he was made Lieutenant, Dec. 26, 1822, Commander, Nov. 8, 1827, Post Captain, Oct. 28, 1834, Knight, and D.C.L. Oxon., 1844. He has also been elected a Fellow of the Linnean Society, (1823,) of the Royal Society, (1828,) of the Royal Astronomical Society and the Royal Geographical Society, and is a corresponding member of several foreign learned associations. In 1833 he received the thanks of the Common Council of the City of London, and a piece of plate from the Land Arctic Expedition; in 1841 was presented with the Founder's Gold Medal of the London Geographical Society, in 1842 with the Gold Medal of the Geographical Society of Paris, and in 1843 (we reckon this among his rewards) with the hand of the lady who since 1844 has been known as Lady Ross. As an author, Sir James Ross is favourably known by his work entitled A Voyage of Discovery and Research in the Southern and Antarctic Regions during the Years 1839-43, Lon., 1847, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Comprising an account of Kerguelen Island, Van Diemen's Land, Campbell and Auckland Islands, New Zealand, the Falkland Islands, Cape Horn, and New South Shetland, the discovery of an extensive Southern Continent named Victoria Land, and the determination of the South Magnetic Pole."—Publisher's Advertisement

They will speak better than we could for the plain, modest, and manly taste of the author,—which seems entirely worthy of his high professional character and signal services."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1847, 166-187, (q v.) Copied in Bost. Liv. Age, xiv. 241-289

Ross, Sir John, Knt., Rear-Admiral R.N., June 24, 1777-August 30, 1856, fourth son of the Rev. Andrew Ross of Balsarroch, minister of the parish of Inch, was b. at Balsarroch, Wigtonshire, Scotland, entered the Royal Navy in 1786, became a midshipman in 1799, Lieutenant in 1805, and Commander in 1812, sailed on his first Northwest Expedition, commanding the Isabella, accompanied by Lieutenant W. E. Parry, commanding the Alexander, April 25, 1818; arrived home November 14 of the same year, and was made Post-Captain the 7th of the next month; was absent on his second Northwest Expedition, (of which the expenses were paid by Felix—afterwards Sir Felix—Booth, then Sheriff of London,) in which Sir James Clarke Ross was second in command, May 24, 1829, to September 19, 1833, received the honour of knighthood and the Companionship of the Bath, Dec. 24, 1834; British Consul at Stockholm, March, 1839, to Feb. 1845; sailed in search of Sir John Franklin, in the Felix, 1850, and remained one winter in the Arctic Sea. No. 9, infra. Sir John married his first wife in 1816, (their son is a magistrate at Cawnpore, in Hindustan,) lost her in 1822, and married a second, Oct. 21, 1834. His eminent services in war and peace were rewarded with many honours in addition to those which we have already recorded. It is indeed with the author, rather than the soldier and the navigator, that we are principally concerned. In this capacity he gave to the world:

Rosse, William Parsons, third Earl of, LL.D., K. P., son of the preceding, b. June 17, 1800, at York; graduated first class in mathematics at Magdalene College, 1822; as Lord Oxmantown, was M.P. for King's county, 1821-34; succeeded to the peerage, 1841; President of the British Association, 1842, and resigned, 1844; President of the Royal Society, 1849-55. In 1836 he was married to Mary, eldest daughter of John Wilmer Field,

Esq., of Heaton Hall, Yorkshire. He died in Oct. 1867. Lord Rosse is widely known throughout the scientific world by his great telescope, already referred to, (see NEWTON, SIR ISAAC, p. 1415; NICHOL, J. P., LL.D., No. 1, p. 1422, supra), and graphically described by Dr. Robinson. For copious information upon this interesting subject we refer the reader to the pamphlet entitled The Monster Telescope erected by the Earl of Rosse, Lon., 1844, 8vo. (see Lon. Athen., 1844, 1144; also, 44, 857, 900, 906, 1048, 1147;) N. Brit. Rev., ii. 175; Dubl. Univ. Mag., xxv. 273; Fraser's Mag., xlii. 591; Eclec. Mag., v. 49, vi. 279, ix. 231, xxii. 184; Liv. Weid's Vacations in Ireland, 1857, p. 8vo; On the Revelations of Lord Rosse's Telescope, by De Quincey. His lordship was an astronomer, engineer, and machinist: the monster reflectors for his telescope were cast by his own hand. He was the author of: 1. Letters on the State of Ireland, 1847, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1847, 279. 2. Memorandum presented to the Council of the Royal Society for rendering the Council of the Society more Efficient. This letter, to Sir J. South, 1856, 8vo, was privately printed. 3. A Few Words on the Relation of Landlord and Tenant in Ireland, Lon., 1867, 8vo. Other notices of his lordship will be found in Dubl. Univ. Mag., xxxvi. 94; Lon. Athen., 1848, 533, Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1851, 635. The Hon. Mrs Ward's Telescope Teachings, 1860, imp. 16mo, is very appropriately dedicated to Lord Rosse. A public monument is to be erected in Ireland to his memory, (1869) A marble cenotaph was erected to his memory in the church at Parsonstown, Ireland, in September, 1869. The inscription runs thus: "He was renowned in the loftiest range of science, and he revealed to mankind, by the unrivalled creation of his genius, a wider vision of the glory of God."

"On the 31st of May I carried to the printer the last canto of the Paradiso, but, as I have still the Notes to write, I am not yet entitled to my 'walk in the garden'."

May this version, and that of Dr. T. W. Parsons, (supra), soon see the light! Longfellow's translation was published in 3 vols. r. 8vo, (I. The Inferno, II. The Purgatorio, III. The Paradiso), Boston, 1867; and C. E. Norton's translation of Dante's Vita Nuova, in 1 vol. r. 8vo, 1867. See, also, Enciclopedia Dantesca, per l'Abate Jacobo, 1867 et seq., 4 vols. We should not be so much absorbed in Dante literature as to forget to state that in The Life of William Blake, &c., by the late A. Gilchrist, 1863, 2 vols. r. 8vo, "the biographer's task was supplemented by the care and research of Dante Gabriel and William Rossetti," and that "the work is completed by a laborious and extensive critical catalogue of Blake's extant works, by Wm. Rossetti."

Rossetti, Gabriele, "one among the many victims of revolutionary change in Italy," who, before his exile, had "charmed the salons of Naples by his facile and beautiful improvisations," (Lon. Athen., 1833, 553,) became Professor of the Italian Language and Literature in King's College, London, and in that city, April 26, 1854, aged 71. Three of his children are noticed in this Dictionary.

Signor Rossetti contends for a hidden sense, which had escaped the notice of previous commentators:

"Among modern commentators on the works of Dante, no one takes a more distinguished place as an original writer than the late Prof. Rossetti. The vast and varied lore which that Dante filist brought to bear on the more recondite sense contained in the Divine Commedia and in the lyrics of Dante and his contemporaries, will remain a memorial of literary labour and loving perseverance."—*Lon. Rouquette, L'Abbe Adrien Emmanuel, an ecclesiastic of the Roman Catholic Church, b. at New Orleans, La., 1813, and educated at the Royal College of Nantes, has gained considerable reputation as an orator and poet. When not engaged in the duties of his sacred office, (he is attached to the R. Catholic Seminary, New Orleans,) he passes much of his time in retirement at Mandeville, parish of St. Tammany.

Rous, Rouse, or Rowse, Francis, M.P. 1579-1658, a native of Halton, Cornwall, educated at Broadgate Hall, now Pembroke College, Oxford, and subsequently a student of law, was M.P. in the first and in later Parliaments of Charles I.; Provost of Eton, 1643; M.P. for Devonshire, 1653, and for Cornwall, 1666; and sat in the House of Lords, 1657. He was also one of Cromwell's Privy Council, and one of the few laymen appointed by the H. of Commons to sit in the Assembly of Divines at Westminster. He published a number of theological treatises and speeches, of which a list will be found in Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 467-469. The tone in which the amiable Anthony commences the bibliographical enumeration is not one of marked respect.

"This person, who was really stilled by the loyal party the old illiterate Jew of Eaton and another Proteus, hath direns things (especially of divinity) extant, wherein much entaustical caution is used."

But the H. of C.'s recommendation of Rouse's version to the consideration of the Assembly of Divines bears date Nov. 20, 1643,—complaint having been made of the "obsolete version of the Psalms by Sternhold and Hopkins." Barton's version was pub. 1645, 8vo, and this seems to be that which is called by the Assembly (Parl. Diary, i. 349) "a good one too." Rouse's version is still (1869) pertinaciously adhered to by some congregations. 8. Psalm of Love to Heal Divisions, 1648, '58, 4to. 9. Routh, Martin Joseph, D.D., Sept. 15, 1755–Dec. 22, 1854, a native of South Elmham, near Beccles, Suffolk, where his father, Rev. Peter Routh, was Rector, matriculated as a battler at Queen's College, Oxford, May 31, 1770, and in July, 1771, was elected a demy of St. Mary Magdalene College; became a Fellow in July, 1776, and M.A. on the 23d of October following; College Librarian, 1781; Senior Proctor, 1783; Junior Dean of Arts, 1784 and 1785, B.D., July 15, 1786; College Bursar, 1791; President of Magdalene College, April 11, 1791, until his death, in his 100th year. He had admitted to Magdalene College 183 Fellows, 234 demies, and 162 choristers. When he was nearly one hundred, some one remarked to him, "That is a pretty good age." "Yes," replied the Doctor, "but there was a Dissenting minister who died at 107; and," continued the old gentleman, "I should like the Church to win." In 1810 he became Rector of Tylehurst, near Reading, and to this retreat he retired for rest at certain seasons of the year. His publications, few in number, were distinguished by profound scholarship and great critical acumen. 1. Row, John, 1568-1646, eldest son of Dr. John Row the Reformer, (minister of Perth, 1560,) was a native of Perth, studied at the University of Edinburgh, and was minister of Carnock, Fifeshire, 1592-1644. He was the author of a work which, after lying more than 200 years in MS., has been recently twice privately printed, viz.: 1. History of the Kirk of Scotland, with Additions and Illustrations by his Sons. Pt. 1, 1558-1637, Pt. 2, [see Row, JOHN, infra.] 1637-1639, Edin., Maidland Club, (No. LV.) 1842, 2 vols. 4to. Presented by Bernah Bothfield, of Norton Hall, Esq., M.P. 2. Historie of the Kirk of Scotland from the Year 1558 to August, 1637, with a Continuation to July, 1639, by his Son, John Row, Principal of King's College, Aberdeen, Edin., Wodrow Society, 1842, 4to. Edited by David Laing.

Row, John, second son of the preceding, was for many years Rector of the Perth Grammar-School, in 1631 became one of the ministers of Aberdeen, in 1644 was chosen Moderator of the Provincial Assembly at Aberdeen; in 1652, by Parliamentary influence, became Principal of King's College, Aberdeen, but fell into disgrace at the Restoration, and resigned this office in 1661. He was subsequently a schoolmaster in Aberdeen, but spent his last years in retirement in the parish of Kinkellar, about eight miles from Aberdeen. See Memorials of the Family of Row, and Chambers's and Thomson's Biog. Dict. of Eminent Scotsmen, ed. 1856, iv. 203-205. He was noted—and the same may be said of his father and grandfather—for an intimate acquaintance with the Hebrew language; and Nos. 1 and 2, infra, were among the first manuals of the kind in Scotland. 1. Hebraicæ Lingux Institutiones, Glasg., 1634, 12mo; 2d ed., combined with—2. Xibias Hebraica seu Vocabularium continens præcipuas Radices Lingux Hebrææ, etc., 1644, 12mo. 3. Εὐχαριστία Βασιλικὴ et Carolum II., etc., Carmen, Abredon, 1660, 4to. Gordonstoun sale, 1976, £2 18s. In this "Carmen" he strove to make his court to the king, styling his Majesty's predecessor "Trux vilis vermes," being the anagram of "Oh vile cruel worm" (Oliver Cromwell) Latinised. But the laudation and abuse were equally vain: he had the mortification of seeing his written censures of the royal family dragged from their recesses in the college and burnt at the cross of Aberdeen by the hands of the hangman. As we have already seen, (Row, JOHN, supra.) he wrote a Supplement (August, 1637-July, 1639) to his father's History of the Kirk of Scotland.

Rowe, Elizabeth, 1674-1737, the daughter of Walter Singer, a Dissenting minister of Ilchester, Somersetshire, where Elizabeth was born, was noted at an early age for her beauty and accomplishments, and could have boasted—if boasting had been her foible—of having Bishop Ken and Dr. Watts for her advisers, the Hon. Mr. Thynne for her tutor, and Matthew Prior for her suitor. She was wise enough to consult her heart in the disposition of her hand, and at the age of thirty-six married Mr. Thomas Rowe, a gentleman ten to thirteen years her junior. Their union—a very happy one it proved—was severed by the death of Mr. Rowe in 1715, aged 28 years. After this sad event she left London, and spent the rest of her life—remaining a widow to the last—at Frome, where she possessed a handsome estate, from which she freely distributed to those less favoured. She began to write verses at twelve years of age, produced her paraphrase of the thirty-eighth chapter of Job (it was suggested to her by the excellent Bishop Ken) when she was nineteen, and cultivated literature more or less during the leisure hours of her life. She was the author of:

1. Poems on Several Occasions, written by Philomela, Lon., 1696, 8vo. Rowe, Nicholas, 1674-1718, the son of John Rowe the editor of Bendloe's and Dalison's Reports, was a native of Little Barford, Bedfordshire; received his education at Westminster School, under Dr. Busby; at sixteen was entered a student of the Middle Temple; at the age of nineteen was left his own master by the death of his father, and henceforth paid much attention to poetry and but little to law, from 1708 to 1711 was Under-Secretary of State, being subordinate to the Duke of Queensberry, who was Secretary; on the accession of George I. (1714) was made Post-Laureate, became one of the Land-Surveyors of the Customs of the Port of London, Clerk of the Prince of Wales's Council, and, by appointment of Lord-Chancellor Parker, Clerk of the Presentations. As an author, editor, and translator, he is known by the following works:

1. The Ambitious Step-Mother; a Tragedy, Lon., 1700, 4to. Founded upon the accession of King Solomon, as related in the First Book of Kings.

"A very good tragedy."—CONGRÈVE: see Berkeley's Lit. Relics, 1789, 8vo, 319.

The success of this piece confirmed the literary disposition of the author.

2. Tamerlane; a Tragedy, 1702, 4to; 1703, 4to. Tamerlane represents William III., and Bajazet Louis XIV. "Except in Rowe's play on the fifth of November, [when Tamerlane was always acted,] I did not expect to hear of Timour's amiable moderation, (White's Pref., p. 7.) yet I can excuse a generous enthusiasm in the reader, and still more in the editor, of the Institutions, [of Timour see WHITE, JOSEPH, D.D.]—GIBSON Decline and Fall, chap. lxxv, n.

"A European scholar commends 'the conqueror's piety, his moderation, and his justice.'"—Rowe's Dedication of "Tamerlane." Prescott's Mexico, 23d ed., 1855, ii. 152, n.

3. The Fair Penitent; a Tragedy, 1703, 4to.

"It is a remarkable instance of the decay of dramatic art at this period, that several of the principal authors of the time felt themselves at liberty to write imitations of old plays belonging to the original school, by way of adapting them to the taste of their own age. The Fair Penitent of Rowe is well known as a poor imitation of Massinger's Palatino; it does not greatly excel the original in the management and conduct of the piece; and in every thing else falls as far beneath it as the baldest translation can sink below the most spirited original."—STRA WALTER SCOTT: Essay on the Drama, in Encyc. Brit., and republished in his Prose Works.

See, also, N. Amer. Rev., July, 1832, 168, by Wm. H. Prescott, the historian.

"The Fair Penitent is one of the most pleasing tragedies on the stage, where it still keeps its turns of appearing, and probably will long keep them, for there is scarcely any work of any poet at once so interesting by the fable and so delightful by the language. The story is domestic, and therefore easily received by the imagination and assimilated to common life, the diction is exquisitely harmonious, and soft or sprightly as occasion requires."

"The character of Lothario seems to have been expanded by Richardson into Lovelace, but he has excelled his original in the moral effect of the fiction."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Rowe, in his English Poets.

See, also, Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1834, (Mrs. Siddons as Calista.)

4. The Biter; a Comedy, 1705, 4to. Tried on the stage in 1704, and eminently successful—with the author; but the audience refused to laugh.

"Rowe wrote a foolish farce, called 'The Biter,' which was damned."—CONGRÈVE to Keally, Dec. 9, 1704.

See P. Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's English Poets, 1854, ii. 105-116, and Index.

5. Ulysses; a Tragedy, 1706, 4to. Temporarily successful on the stage. 6. The Royal Converts; a Tragedy, 1708, 4to.

"Procopius may have suggested to Mr. Rowe the character and situation of Rodogune in the tragedy of the Royal Convert."—GIBSON Decline and Fall, chap. xxxvi., n. (q. v.)

7. The Plays of Shakespeare, Revised and Corrected, with an Account of his Life and Writings, by N. Rowe; to which are added his Poems; with Critical Remarks on the Plays, &c., (by Charles Gildon,) 1709-10, 7 vols. 8vo, some l. p. The first edition of Shakespeare with plates. It was repub. in 1714, 9 vols. 12mo, "and then expired, without a struggle." (Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 800-1.)

"Rowe went no further than to the edition nearest to him in time, which was the folio of 1685, the last and worst of these impressions: this he republished with great exactness, correcting here and there some of its grossest mistakes, and dividing into acts and scenes the plays that were not divided before."—CAPPEL.

"I believe those who compare it with former copies will find that he has done more than he promised, and that, without the pomp of notes or boasts of criticisms, many passages are happily restored. . . . He at least contributed to the popularity of his author."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Rowe.

See, also, Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, i. 4, 5, 7, n. 1881

8. Translation of Book I. of Quillet's Callipædia, 1710, 20, 33, 8vo.

"His translation of the 'Golden Verses,' and of the first book of Quillet's Poem, have nothing to them remarkable."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Rowe.

Of Rowe's translation from the Greek of The Commentary of Hierocles upon the Golden Verses of Pythagoras, an edit. was pub., Glasgow, 1756, 12mo.

9. Jane Shore; a Tragedy, &c., sed 1714, 4to.

"Written, as the author professes, in imitation of Shakespeare's style. In what he thought himself an imitator of Shakespeare it is not easy to conceive. The numbers, the diction, the sentiments, and the conduct, every thing in which imitation can consist, are remote in the utmost degree from the manner of Shakespeare, whose dramas it resembles only as it is an English story and as some of the persons have their names in history. . . . I know not that there can be found in his plays any deep search into nature, any accurate discrimination of kindred qualities, or nice display of passion in its progress; all is general and undressed. Nor does he much interest or affect the auditor, except in 'Jane Shore,' who is always seen and heard with pity. Alas! she is a character of empty noise with no resemblance to sorrow nor to natural madness."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Rowe.

"It was mighty simple in Rowe to write a play now professedly in Shakespeare's style, that is, professedly in the style of a bad age!"—PORR, in Spence's Anecdotes, sect. iv.

"I have seen a play professedly writ in the style of Shakespeare, wherein the resemblance lay in one single line."

'And so good-morrow t'ye, good master Lieutenant.'"

PORR: Martinus Scribæus, chap. ix.

"Perhaps you never saw Mrs. Siddons act it; but, even read, it is most touching poetry: you must allow Jane Shore her rank among the heroines of the English stage. . . . Rowe's Jane Shore I maintain to be perfectly moral: he paints her only in her penitence—in all the horror of remorse—in abject poverty she is brought before you as the victim of her own guilt, and, if you will compare with Shakespeare, I must say that Cleopatra is immoral, and Jane Shore is not."—SIR JAMES MACGILLIVRAID: Portraits of a Man of the World: Lon. Gent. Mag. June, 1844, 587, 588.

See, also, Blackw. Mag., June, 1834, 165–167, (Mrs. Siddons as Jane Shore.)

10. Lady Jane Gray; a Tragedy, 1715, 4to.

"Rowe did not possess boldness and vigour, but was not without sweetness and feeling. he could excite the softer emotions, and hence, in his First Penitent, Jane Shore, and Lady Jane Gray, he has successfully chosen female heroines and their weaknesses for his subjects."—AUGUSTUS WILLIAM VON SCHLEGEL: Lects. on Dram. Art and Lit., Lect. XXVIII., Black's trans.

11. An Ode for the New Year, 1716, fol. 12. Lucan's Pharsalia translated into English Verse, with Remarks, Historical and Geographical, (and a life of Rowe, by Dr. Welwood,) 1718, fol., some l. p.; also in 2 vols. 8vo, 1720, '22, '30, '32, '46, '51, '53, 1807. It is also in Chalmers's Collection of the British Poets.

"The version of Lucan is one of the greatest productions of English poetry, for there is perhaps none that so completely exhibits the genius and spirit of the original. . . . The 'Pharsalia' of Rowe deserves more notice than it obtains, and as it is more read will be more esteemed."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Rowe.

"It would have been improved if Rowe had had a couple of years to render it less paraphractical."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell's Life.

"Mr Pitt used often to repeat with pleasure the six or eight lines added by Mrs. Rowe to Rowe's Lucan."—IBID.: Lord Grenville, 185.

"Rowe undertook his translation more in the spirit of party than of poetry, and the best portions of it are those which are least worthy of attention in the original."—LON. QUAR. REVIEW.

A volume of Rowe's Plays was pub. 1714, 12mo; his Poetical Works appeared in 1720, 2 vols. 12mo, and his Works (exclusive of his translation of Lucan) were subsequently pub. in 2 vols. 12mo, 1747, '56, '66, and '92. "Rowe, solemn, florid, and declamatory."—SMOLLETT: Hist. of Eng.: Geo. I. Notes.

Rowe was twice married; and this will not surprise those who linger over the glowing eulogies on his face, person, and mind which his friend Dr. Welwood has transmitted to posterity. True, his friend Pope charges him with the want of that valuable article, a heart, and Addison admitted its existence only to testify to the lightness of its material, ("the levity of his heart is such,")—but the former acknowledged the charm of qualities which, to say the least, go quite as far to win acceptance and popularity in general society:

"Mr Rowe accompanied me, and passed a week in the Forest. I need not tell you how much a man of his turn entertained me; but I must acquaint you there is a vivacity and gaiety of disposition, almost peculiar to him, which make it impossible to part from him without that uneasiness which generally succeeds all our pleasures."—POPE to Edward Blount, Feb. 10, 1715–16.

This quotation will remind some of our readers of Pope's epitaph inscribed on Rowe's monument in Westminster Abbey: how much it was altered (we do not say improved) from the original will be seen by comparing the lines as they stand with the first draught in Pope's Works, and in Biog. Brit., v. (1760) 3522.

Rowley, Thomas. See CHATTERTON, THOMAS.

"Rowley's pretended poems . . . have all the elegance of Waller and Prior, and more than Lord Bury. . . . I think poor Chatterton was an astonishing genius; but I cannot think that Rowley forswore metres that were invented long after he was dead, or that our language was more refined at Bristol in the reign of Henry V than it was at court under Henry VIII. . . . There is not a symptom in the poems, but the old words, that savours of Rowley's age. Change the old words for modern, and the whole construction is of yesterday"—*Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Chib. Massinger. 12. The Witch of Edmonton; Tragi-Com., 1658, 4to. With J. Ford and T. Decker. 13. The Birth of Merlin; Tragi-Com., 1662, 4to. The publisher of this (1662) asserts that Shakespeare assisted in this composition, but this is not to be credited. Rowley was also the author of a scarce tract. 14. A Search for Money, &c., 1609, 4to, repub., ed. by J. P. Collier, 1840, p. 8vo, (Percy Soc.,) for an account of which see Brit. Bibliog., iv. 320–22, and *Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. "He is generally classed only in the third rank of our dramatists. His Muse is evidently a plebeian nymph, and had not been educated in the school of the Graces. His most tolerable production is 'The New Wonder, or, A Woman never Vext.' Its drafts of citizen life and manners have an air of reality and honest truth, the situation and characters are forcible, and the sentiments earnest and unaffected"—Campbell's Specimens.

"Rowley appears to have excelled in describing a certain amiable quietness of disposition and disinterested love of morality, carried almost to a paradoxical excess, as in his 'Fair Quarrel,' and in the comedy of 'A Woman never Vext,' which is written in many parts with a pleasing simplicity and naïveté equal to the novelty of the conception"—Hazlitt's Lects. on the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. II.

"A Match at Midnight, and All's Lost by Lust, the former in the comic, and the latter in the tragic, department of his art, evince, in incident and humour, in character and in pathos, powers which repel the charge of mediocrity. Upon the whole, however, we consider him as ranking last in the roll of worthies who have thus far graced our pages"—Drake's Shakesp. and his Times, i. 570.

"Rowley and Le Tourneur, especially the former, have occasionally good lines; but we cannot say that they were very superior dramatists. Rowley, however, was [not] often in comic partnership with Massinger."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 124.

Rowson, Susanna, 1761-1824, a native of Portsmouth, England, and a daughter of Lieutenant William Haswell, of the Royal Navy, in 1769 accompanied her father on a voyage to America, shared his shipwreck on Lovell's Island, his subsequent settlement at Nantucket, and his return home on the occasion of the Revolutionary War; in 1786 married, in London, William Rowson, leader of the band attached to the Royal Guards; in 1793 came with her husband to America, and was for three years engaged as an actress at the Philadelphia theatre, and closed her "histrionic career" at the Federal Street Theatre in 1796; subsequently kept school at Medford, Newton, and Boston, Mass. (she tells us in 1822 that she had been thus engaged for the last twenty-five years,) and died at Boston, March 2, 1824. She was the author of the following works.

1. Victoria, the Characters taken from Real Life, &c., by Susanna Haswell, Lon., 1786, 2 vols. 12mo. Dedicated to the Duchess of Devonshire. Charitably noticed in Lon. Month Rev. Jan 1787, 83. 2. Poems on Various Subjects, 1788, 8vo, pp. 72. Condemned by Lon. Month Rev., July, 1789, 85. 5. A Trip to Parnassus. 6. A Critique on Authors and Performers. 7. Mentorina. Contains some views on education. 8. Charlotte Temple; or, A Tale of Truth, about 1790. 25,000 copies sold in a few years after publication, and still republished - last ed., Lon., 1849, 12mo; N. York, 1853, 16mo, 1864, 18mo. With the exception of the names of the characters, we are assured that this whole story is "almost literally true." See Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, lxxvii. It was followed by a sequel entitled—9. Lucy Temple; or, The Three Orphans. Considered inferior to its predecessor. 10. Rebecca; or, The Fille-de-Chambre. Partly autobiographical. 11. The Volunteers; a Farce, Phila., 1793. Founded on the Whiskey Insurrection in Pennsylvania. 12. Slaves in Algiers, an Opera, 1794, 12mo. 13. The Female Patriot; a Farce, 1794. 14. The Trials of the Human Heart; a Novel, 1795, 4 vols. 15. The Standard of Liberty; a Poetical Address, Balt., 1795. 16. Cobbett's Kick for a Bite, Phila., 8vo, 1795, 2d ed., 1796. The Rev. Elias Nason, to whom we are indebted for some of the above facts, and who read before the meeting of the New England Hist.-Genealogical Society of August, 1859, a paper on the Life and Writings of Mrs. Rowson, (see Hist. Mag., Oct. 1859, 301,) is employed upon a biographical account of this industrious writer and successful teacher, (see Hist. Mag., March, 1860, 96.) He remarks, in a letter to the author of this Dictionary,

"Her style is easy, graceful, and animated, though sometimes ungrammatical and unfinished. A selection from her writings, if judiciously made, would be valuable."

His additions to Sir Robert Atkyns make it the most sensible history of a county that we have had yet; for his descriptions of the site, soil, products, and prospects of each parish are extremely good and picturesque, and he treats fanciful prejudices and Saxon etymologies, when unfounded, and traditions, with due contempt."—*Horace Walpole to Rev. Rugge, Thomas, a citizen of London, d. about 1672, left a MS. Diary, often quoted by Lord Braybrooke in his 4th edition (Lon., 1853, 4 vols. 8vo) of Peypys's Diary and Correspondence, viz: "Mercurius Politicus Redivivus," or, A Collection of the Most Material Occurrences and Transactions in Public Affairs since Anno Domini 1659 untill (28 March, 1672,) serving as an annual diurnal for future satisfaction and information. Est natura hominum novitatis avida. Plinius. This is preserved in the British Museum, (Additional MSS., 10,116, 10,117.) It was announced for publication, edited by Mr. Hopper, but so far (Oct. 1869) has not appeared. Rugge often corroborates Peypys.

Rugge, George, b. at Lavenham, Suffolk, about 1575, d. 1621 or 1622, educated at St John's College, Cambridge, and Fellow of Trinity College, acquired great reputation by his Latin comedy of Ignoramus, a satire on "the mixed language of the Common Law and the dulness of some of its practitioners," which was played before King James I. at Cambridge on the 8th of March and again on the 13th of May, 1614. No less than nine Latin (Lon., 1630, 18mo, 1659, '68, 12mo, Westm., 1731, 12mo, some l. p., &c.: see HAWKINS, JOHN SIDNEY, No. 1) and two English (best by Robert [?odrington,] Lon., 1662, 4to) editions have appeared: see, also, an English Prologue and Epilogue to the Latin Comedy of Ignoramus, &c., by George Dyer, 1797, 8vo; Hawkins's Pref. to his ed. of Ignoramus, Lon. Crit. Rev., lxiv 333, and CARLIS, ROBERT. Lord Coke was annoyed by the satire of Ignoramus, and Cowley alludes to it in some witty lines. To Rugge, also, are ascribed the comedies of Civil Law, 1597, and Revers, or Verily, neither of which has been printed.

Rumford, Sir Benjamin Thompson, Count of, b. March 26, 1753, at Woburn, Mass., d. August 20, 1814, at Auteuil, near Paris, after a short experience at store-keeping and school-keeping, in 1772 married the widow of Colonel Rolfe and the daughter of Rev. Timothy Walker, of Rumford, (now Concord,) Mass; was with the American army at Lexington, but subsequently joined the Royalists, and became Lieutenant-Colonel of a regiment of Dragoons; in 1784 was knighted by George III., and in 1791 created, by the Elector Palatine of Bavaria, a Count of the Holy Roman Empire; resided for several years at Munich, where he attained great distinction in every department of action—civil, military, political, and scientific—in which he exerted his great talents. In 1802 he married the widow of Lavohsier; but—as the lady's first husband would have said, and the second proved—where there are no affinities there can be no union, and the parties soon separated. As an author he is best known by his Essays, Political, Economical, and Philosophical, Lon., 1796, 3 vols. 8vo, 3d ed., 1797, 3 vols. 8vo, (reprinted from 3d Lon. ed., Bost., 1798, 3 vols. 8vo;) 1798, 3 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1800, 3 vols. 8vo. To which add a 4th vol.,—Count Rumford's Philosophical Papers, 1802, 8vo; again, 1803, 8vo. In these vols. we have accounts of those inventions and suggestions in matters of political economy, domestic economy, natural philosophy, &c., which conferred upon the author such wide and honourable distinction. His Essays on the Management of the Poor, &c. were repub. in 1 vol. 12mo, Lon., 1851, and again in 1855. For a detailed statement of his contributions to science (among which are papers in *Phil. Rupert, Prince Robert, of Bavaria, known as Prince Rupert, 1619-1682, the son of Frederic V., Elector Palatine of the Rhine, by the Princess Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James I., lived most of his life in England, fought for England, published some political papers in England, (see Watt's Bibl. Brit.,) and died in England, and therefore may claim a place—not a very conspicuous one—in a Dictionary of English Authors. See Historical Memoirs of the Life and Death of Prince Rupert, Lon., 1683, 8vo, Sir G. Bromley's Collec. of Letters, 1787, 8vo, Campbell's Admirals, Walpole's Anecdotes, Strutt's Dict.; Rees's Cyc. Rush, Benjamin, M.D., Dec. 24, 1745-April 19, 1813, a descendant of John Rush, one of Cromwell's favourite captains, was born on his father's farm in Byberry township, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, graduated at the College of New Jersey in 1760, and pursued his medical studies under Dr. John Redman, of Philadelphia, from that date until 1766, subsequently attended lectures for two years at Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.D. in 1768, gaining great reputation by his Latin thesis, Dissertatio Physica de Coctione Ciborum in Ventriculo, (pub. in Edin., 1768, 8vo;) continued his medical researches at London and Paris in the winter of 1768 and the summer of 1769, and in the latter year was elected Professor of Chemistry in the College of Philadelphia, transferred to the chair of the Theory and Practice of Medicine in 1789, and in 1791, the college having been elevated to the University of Pennsylvania, elected Professor of the Institutes and Practice of Medicine and of Clinical Practice,—to which in 1796 he added the professorship of the Practice of Physic,—retaining the three departments for the rest of his life.

Eminent as a physician, a student of general science, a scholar, and a philanthropist, Dr. Rush was equally distinguished as an active and enthusiastic advocate of the cause of American liberty in 1776, as a representative of Pennsylvania in the National Congress, he signed the Declaration of Independence, in April, 1777, having six months previously married the daughter of Richard Stockton, of New Jersey, who also signed the Declaration, he was appointed Surgeon-General, and in July the Physician-General, of the Military Hospitals for the Middle Department, and in that capacity attended his wounded compatriots at the battles of Princeton and Brandywine; in 1787 he was a member of the Convention of Pennsylvania for the Adoption of the Federal Constitution; and from 1799 until his death was Treasurer of the United States Mint.

But the arduous duties of his responsible professorships,—it was computed that no less than two thousand two hundred and fifty pupils in all profited by his public instructions,—the care of many private students, the welcome details of an extensive practice, and patriotic labors for the conservation of those political liberties which he had so materially aided to secure, were not found so absorbing as to preclude frequent and most valuable contributions to the Republic of Letters during a period of forty-nine years,—from the 19th to the 68th year of his life. Of the topics treated of in his many pamphlets, (in which shape almost all of his principal productions originally appeared,) and his papers in the scientific and literary periodicals of the day, we have made the following alphabetical table, which exhibits at a glance his versatility, industry, and knowledge of the requisites of the "times and seasons" in which his days were cast.

I. Agriculture. II. Ardent Spirits. III. Bible as a School-Book. IV. Biography. V. Capital Punishment. VI. Climate. VII. Criminal Jurisprudence. VIII. Education. IX. Horticulture. X. Indians of N. America. XI. Insanity. XII. Latin and Greek. XIII. Legislation. XIV. Longevity. XV. Manners. XVI. Medicine. XVII. Mental Philosophy. XVIII. Moral Philosophy. XIX. Morals. XX. Negro Slavery. XXI. Philology. XXII. Physicians and their Duties. XXIII. Political Economy. XXIV. Political Philosophy. XXV. Politics. XXVI. Tobacco.

A more rigid analysis, a stricter classification, would considerably expand this list, but the intelligent student will be satisfied with no analysis, classification, or résumé which could be offered, but must furnish himself with the following seven octavo volumes, into which Dr. Rush collected those occasional writings which he thought most likely to prove of permanent service to his race.

Vols. i., ii., iii., iv., Medical Inquiries and Observations, 3d ed., Phila., 1809. 1st ed. was pub. 1789-98, 5 vols. 8vo, 2d ed., 1804, 4 vols. 8vo.

Vol. v., Medical Inquiries and Observations upon the Diseases of the Mind, 5th ed., 1835. 1st ed. was pub. 1812, 8vo.

Vol. vi., Sixteen Introductory Lectures to Courses on Medicine, &c., with Two Lectures upon the Pleasures of the Senses and of the Mind, 1811, 8vo.

Vol. vii., Essays, Literary, Moral, and Philosophical, 2d ed., 1806, 8vo. 1st ed. was pub. 1798, 8vo. Nor must the medical student fail to add to these seven volumes Dr. Rush's editions of Sydenham's Works, 1809, 8vo; Cleghorn on the Diseases of Minorca, 1809, 12mo; Pringle on the Diseases of the Army, 1810, 8vo; Hillary on the Air and Diseases of Minorca, 1811, 8vo,—all enriched by the editor's annotations,—and Caldwell's translation of Senac on Fevers, which is introduced by a Preface by Rush's learned yet elegant pen. The collector of American History will find much to interest him in a volume republished (from Poulson's American Advertiser for 1801) by the Philadelphia Society for the Establishment and Support of Charity Schools,—Dr. Rush's Account of the Life and Character of Christopher Ludwick, Baker-General of the Army during the Revolutionary War, Phila., 1831, 12mo. REES, JOHN T., M.D.; SANDERS, JAMES, M.D., No. 1. It would be easy to quote—the difficulty is to refrain from quoting—from the authorities just cited the warmest eulogies to the merits of this illustrious man.

"His name," remarks one of the most learned and distinguished men of modern times,—one, too, as we have just seen, of Rush's biographers, "was familiar to the medical world as the Sydenham of America. His accurate observations and correct discrimination of epidemic diseases well entitled him to this distinction, while in the original energy of his reasoning he far excelled his prototype"—Dr. THOMAS YOUNG. ubi supra

His self-denying services to humanity indeed attracted the attention and elicited the commendation, not of the "medical world" only, but of all classes and orders of men. The King of Prussia in 1805, the Queen of Etruria in 1807, the Emperor of Russia in 1811, sent costly offerings to him who had the courage and the faith to "stand between the living and the dead" till "the plague was stayed." The illustrious Zimmermann, when he heard of Rush's services during the fever of 1793, for once forgot his praises of "Solitude" in admiration of the philanthropy which sought this grim companionship with the King of Terrors and his ghostly victims, and declared that

"Sa conduite a mérité que non-seulement la ville de Philadelphie, mais l'humanité entière lui élève une statue"

Equally at home among the rich and the poor, (we quote a few lines from a tribute to his character published by us in the North American Review for October, 1860,) now administering consolation at the bedside of the departing, and anon one of the most resolute in the imposing convocation which decreed the Magna Charta of American liberty, his life was full of honour, and his death was peace. When at last his career of usefulness was suddenly arrested, it was felt that his country, and especially the city long honoured by his well-earned fame, had sustained no common loss. All ranks and conditions lamented his death, but no tribute would have been so grateful to the departed spirit, had it been allowed to linger a while amidst familiar scenes, as the tears of the poor and the wretched, who, rendered bold by the agony of a great grief, filled the house of mourning with their lamentations,—imploping permission once more to gaze upon the face, or at least to touch the coffin, of the benefactor whom they should see no more on earth. But why prolong "human eulogies" upon those whom we believe "applauded by angels and numbered with the just"?

A Narrated Dialogue, 1869, 8vo, pp. 76. By his will, dated 25th Feb. 1860, Dr. Rush bequeathed his whole estate, (valued at $1,067,000,) after the payment of certain legacies and annuities, to the establishment and support of "The Ridgway branch of the Philadelphia Library." In a second codicil, dated 12th April, 1869, he gives the following directions regarding his publications:

"I have given the copyrights of all my works to the Library Company, and I will and direct that they shall, for the next half-century, publish every ten years (and earlier and oftener, if called for) an edition of five hundred copies of any or of all of them, so that they shall always have on hand a number sufficient to satisfy any demand which may be made for any or either of them, at a price not exceeding the cost of publication. I leave additions and corrections in the printer's copies, preparatory to a subsequent edition, which I imperatively require to be published exactly as they are left. The original parts of them have been written without assistance, and I wish to be alone responsible for all the faults of thought, division, definition, and style, and of my corrected orthography, as I consider it. An editor sometimes joins himself to a work by a supposed emendation of it. Let him, in a work of his own, justly blame what he pleases in mine, but not attempt to suit it to any future times and manners. Every writing should have its own times and manners. Let him prevent, not imagine, typographical errors, let him strive to improve my spelling only where the world corrects its own redundancies and comparisons on that point. In our important faults it is bad morality, even in science and literature, to try to escape the charge of errors by turning them over to others for correction."

States, 1816; Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Court of Great Britain, 1817–25; Secretary of the U. States Treasury, 1825–29; candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the U. States on the same ticket with John Quincy Adams, candidate for the Presidency, 1828; Commissioner to receive the Smithsonian Bequest, 1836–38, American Minister at Paris, 1847–49. The last ten years of his life were spent in retirement at the paternal estate of Sydenham, in the suburbs of Philadelphia. He left three sons—Benjamin, J. Murray, (now, alas! no longer living,) and Richard—and two daughters.

For a notice of this valuable collection we may be permitted to refer to an article, by the author of this Dictionary, in the North American Review, Oct. 1860, 491–507, and to quote its closing lines.

"In conclusion, we need hardly remark that Rush's 'Occasional Productions' constitute a book of deep and permanent interest, which must take its place in the historical library by the side of the volumes of Sparks, Everett, Bancroft, Trevelyan, and Wheaton. Could we be assured of a succession of American statesmen and diplomatists of the same stamp as Richard Rush, we might confidently calculate for the future upon good management at home and reputable representation abroad."

"The work has been edited and published in a style which does credit to those engaged therein, as well as to the memory of an excellent man, a faithful public servant, and a Christian gentleman."—HENRY T. TUCKERMAN.

Rushworth, John, 1607?–1690, a native of Northumberland, educated at Oxford, and subsequently a member of Lincoln's Inn, played a distinguished part on the Parliamentary side; was several times an M. P.; acted as assistant clerk to Henry Elsyngue, and was secretary to Sir T. Fairfax and Sir O. Bridgman. He neglected his business whilst gratifying his passion for recording all the remarkable transactions of his time, and was consequently thrown into King's Bench Prison for debt in 1684, and there died in 1690. As an author, Rushworth is known by his Historical Collections, pub. 1659–1701, 1893.

7 vols. fol., and The Tryall of Thomas, Earl of Strafford, 1680, fol.; again, 1700, fol., which is ranked as an 8th vol. of the Historical Collections.

The 7 vols. comprise four Parts, viz.: Pt. 1, 1618-29, vol. i., 1659, (three edits., one of which is dated 1675, appeared in 1659, and a fourth edit. in 1682;) Pt. 2, 1628-9-40, vols. ii., iii., 1680; Pt. 3, 1640-44, vols. iv., v., 1692; Pt. 4, 1645-48, vols. vi., vii., 1701. A new and better edit. of the whole, together with the Tryall of Strafford, was pub. in 1721, 8 vols. fol.; l. p., r. fol. The title runs as follows: Historical Collections of Private Matters of State, Weighty Matters in Law, Remarkable Proceedings in Five Parliaments, from 1618 to 1648; also the Tryall of Thomas, Earl of Strafford, upon an Impeachment of High Treason. Rushworth's intention (see Pref. to vol. ii.) was to bring down his register to the dissolution of the Long Parliament in 1653. An abridgment of the original vols., entitled Historical Collections, Abridged and Improved, appeared in 1703, 6 vols. 8vo. These contain matter not in the first folio ed.; but the student must have the last folio ed., (1721, worth about £5,) and should add to it The Connexion between Heywood Townshend and Rushworth's Collections, 1681, 8vo.

Rushworth has been lauded as a truthful and impartial narrator by the enemies of Charles I., and denounced as a liar by the friends of that monarch and his measures. Nelson, we have seen, (Nelson, JOHN, supra), undertook to confute Rushworth; but his Impartial Collection, promised to extend to 1648, was cut short by his death, coming down no lower than Jan. 1641-2. Bishop Warburton found "vastly curious and valuable matter" in both Collections.

John Dunton (see his Post Angel, and Lon. Gent. Mag., June, 1857, 675) declares of Rushworth's Fourth Part that "the reader must needs find it as much diverting and pleasurable as instructive and profitable," but our modern Censor, Thomas Carlyle, rather disrespectfully refers to the chronicler as "dusty old Rushworth." Rushworth also published from time to time, during the Civil War, a number of single Letters to the Parliament, and left MSS. which have never yet seen the light.

Ruskin, John, LL.D., b. in London, 1819, and educated as a gentleman commoner at Christ Church, Oxford, where, in 1839, he took the Newdegate Prize for English Poetry, was appointed Rode's Lecturer at Cambridge in 1867, and Slade Professor of Art in the University of Oxford, Aug. 1869. He has devoted himself for many years, in the various capitals of Europe, to the study of painting and architecture, and communicated to the public, from time to time, the results of his investigations, in a series of well-known volumes and brochures, which we proceed to enumerate. Mr. Ruskin's critics find so much to say both in praise and censure of his style, his spirit, and his canons of art, respectively, that a reference to their verdicts will be the most equitable discharge of our judicial duties. Of some of these verdicts, however, we shall, in accordance with our custom, present brief summaries to our readers.

The publication price of these splendid imperial 8vo vols. was as follows: vol. i., 18s., (1st ed., 1843, 8vo, 12s.) ii., 10s. 6d.; iii., 38s., iv., 50s.; v., 50s.: total, £38 8s. 6d.

At the conclusion of the Preface to vol. v., Mr. Ruskin, after explaining the causes of the delay in the completion of his series, (extending, it will be observed, from 1843 to 1860,) remarks,

"In the main aim and principle of the book there is no variation from its first syllable to its last. It declares the perfectness and eternal beauty of the Work of God, and tests all work of man by concurrence with, or subjection to, that. And it differs from most books, and has a chance of being in some respects better for the difference, that it has not been written either for fame, or for money, or for conscience's sake, but of necessity."

It will be proper to add extracts from several critiques, —the first written after the publication of volume i., the second and third after the publication of volume iv., and the last recorded immediately after the issue of volume v.:

"We have already bestowed on this volume more space than its merits deserve, but its gross and glaring extravagances and defects constitute a strong call to notice. It is the worst book of a bad series of books, mischievous to art, mischievous to literature, but mischievous above all to those young and eager minds, animated by the love of art and of literature, which may mistake this declamatory trash for substantial or stimulating food. We are the less disposed to acquit Mr. Ruskin because he is not altogether without faculties which might have made him a useful and an elegant writer. His style, when it is not too inflated, is generally perspicuous, and sometimes forcible, his perceptions are acute, he is not devoid of industry, or even of taste. But all these qualities are perverted and destroyed by the entire absence of masculine judgment, by the failure of the logical faculty, and by a strange propensity to mistake the illusions of his own fancy for the laws of reality and the principles of truth." —Edin. Rev., April, 1856. Ruskinism.

"He appears never to think out his subject before he writes upon it. Very much of his philosophy, of his criticism, and of his invective, (and, whilst one of the greatest masters of diffused writing, he is one of the strongest in condensed invective,) is plainly the result of merely present feeling, and consequently involves him in all kinds of difficulties and inconsistencies, which much of his future time and temper is consumed in reconciling, denying, or explaining away. He is in fact one of the most impulsive of writers, whilst he also claims to be one of the most infallible. Hence he turns aside to settle every subject that happens to come under notice in the course of his investigation, (from the principles of Christianity and the emptiness of German philosophy, down to Gil Blas's immorality, the worthlessness of railways for the conversion of the heathen, and the vanity of ladies' dresses,) instead of concentrating his powers on the task that lies before him, and thus we have in 'Modern Painters' the most diffuse, and in many respects most misleading, where we might have had the most important as well as the most brilliant, work of its kind in modern literature." —English Cyc., Biog., v., 1857, 205. Ruskin, John.

"If all charm of poetry and description were discharged from Mr. Ruskin's writings, and they had to depend merely upon their logic, they would not keep out of the dust-hole a week. People buy the 'Modern Painters,' not to read drawing-masters' platitudes and moderate abuse, which in the next volume will be retracted or explained away, but to read the prose poems, — the industrious, clever traveller's diary thrown into prose rhythm." —Lon. Athen., May 28, 1856, 704. Review of Ruskin's Two Paths, &c.

"Now it becomes us to inquire how this task has been performed. Our duty is to report that it is well, admirably, and nobly done. In method single, clear, and as a whole eloquent to a marvel, as the world knows; and, taken in the mass, these five volumes contain the most valuable contributions to art-literature the language can show. Unstable, crotchety, passionate, too intense at times to be just, still they contain worlds of thought, imagination, and knowledge such as no other are."

writer can induce. A strong and earnest purpose runs through them all, given to the highest ends. It is impossible but that Art should be the better for them, be it only through the opening of people's eyes to some of the secret chambers of art-poetry."—*Lon. To Mr. Ruskin we are also indebted for the illustrative text in Turner's Harbours of England, (12 engravings by Lupton,) 1856, fol., (see Athen., 1856, 921.) and for minor productions pub. from time to time for the last twenty-five years,—from the poem in T. K. Hervey's English Helicon of the Nineteenth Century, in 1841, to the papers in the Art Journal on The Census of Aglais, in 1865, and the Introduction to Edgar Taylor's collection of Grimm's German Popular Stories, 1869, 4to. The pages of the Quarterly Reviews, Fraser and the Geological Magazine, the Art Journal, and The Reader, all bear witness to his industry. Of his fugitive productions we especially commend to the reader the reviews in the London Quarterly for June, 1847, (Lord Lindsay on the History of Christian Art,) and March, 1848, (Eastlake on the History of Oil Painting.) See, also, Acland's Oxford Examinations, 1858, 8vo.

We should not omit to mention that he is the literary executor of his late friend, J. M. W. Turner, and in this capacity has recently furnished Mr. Walter Thornbury (q. v.) with materials for a life of the great artist.

"The latter pictures of Turner," remarks an eminent historian, "when he indulged in a new and more vivid style of colouring, in which bright orange and saffron predominate, can hardly be considered as his productions. They would be more aptly designated as the works of genius run mad. There is only one consolation in reflecting on this running riot of so much talent, and that is, that it has elicited the genius and displayed the taste and vivid powers of description of his accomplished advocate, Mr. Ruskin, who, in attempting to defend his extravagances, has only caused his ingenuity to be the more admired that it has obviously been exerted in an indefensible cause. His great and varied genius and taste appear equally conspicuous in his Seven Lamps of Architecture,—one of the most profound and original works of the kind in the English language."—SIR ARTHUR ALISON Hist. of Europe, 1816-52, chap. v.

"Mr. Ruskin seems to me one of the few genuine writers, as distinguished from book-makers, of this age. His earnestness even amuses me in certain passages, [in the Stones of Venice]; for I cannot help laughing to think how utilitarians will fume and fret over his deep, serious, and (as they will think) fanatical reverence for Art. That pure and severe mind you ascribed to him speaks in every line. He writes like a consecrated priest of the Abstract and Ideal."—CHARLOTTE BRONTË Life, by Mrs. Gaskell.

"Mr. Ruskin's writings have all the qualities of premature old age,—its coldness, callousness, and contraction. There is no development apparent in all he has written. . . . His contradictions and false conclusions are from the beginning those of a cold and hardened habit, in which no enthusiasm involuntarily leads astray and no generosity instinctively leads aright. His revivings of all that is most sacred in the past, and his insults to all who are most sensitive in the present, bear the stamp of proceeding rather from an unfeeling heart than a hasty judgment, while such necessarily have been the vitiating effects upon himself of the unrestrained indulgence of these habits, that his latter works, as we shall have occasion to prove, show him to have arrived at a blind rhodomontade of reasoning and a reckless violence of language almost unparalleled in the annals of literature."—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1866.

One of the late (he may be identical with one of the earliest) reviewers of Mr. Ruskin is as little complimentary as the critic just quoted:

"Mr. Ruskin has been before the world for some years as the most voluminous, the most confident, and the most dogmatic of art-critics. He has astonished his readers no less by his platitudes than by his paradoxes. . . . There is nothing more painful in Mr. Ruskin's writings than the total want of reverence for things human or divine that pervades them. The treasures of ancient art, from which successive ages have drunk deep draughts of inspiration, are to him nothing but stumbling-blocks in a dark valley of ruin. (Lectures, p. 219.) . . . Mystery and unintelligibility have in all ages been the grand resource of those who have wished to impose upon the gullibility of the world and to pass for being wiser than their neighbours. Quacks religious, quacks moral, quacks political, and quacks literary, have resorted to them, no less than quacks legal; and nowhere will they be found in greater abundance than in the ponderous tomes with which, year after year, Mr. Ruskin burdens our greasy tables."—Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1860.

And this, and many strictures such as this, is all the gratitude which Mr. Ruskin receives for his having solicited for "the present critic of Blackwood's Magazine the respect due to honest, hopeless, helpless imbecility." (Notes to 2d ed. of vol. i. of Modern Painters, 1844.) It will be remembered that Mr. Ruskin pays a later compliment to Blackwood in his remarks on the caricature in Punch (1857) which grievously offended Maga. On this occasion we witnessed on the part of the eloquent artist another solemn exhumation of the author of Endymion, who, Ziska-like, is still used to rally indignant authors to battle when they wage defensive war against hostile reviewers.

A commentator upon Mr. Ruskin in the London Critic remarks,

"A kind of Wordsworth in prose, Ruskin probably deserves his immense reputation as little as Wordsworth deserved his. Himself a colourist, he is a critic only on colour. His descriptions the most vaunted read to me like catalogues. I should decidedly say of Mr. Ruskin that he is more inventorial than inventive. He enumerates particulars, and he daubs over each particular with a glaring hue, and that is called painting. How differently have Walter Scott, John Wilson, Thomas Carlyle, and all who have excelled in descriptive power, painted! A somewhat lifeless being, Ruskin cannot produce life. He can write notes on sheep-folds, but he cannot enable us to see a living thing, a single sheep."

But we have kindlier judgments of Mr. Ruskin than these to quote before we pass to our next subject:

"Unquestionably," says Fraser's Magazine, "one of the most remarkable men of this age—may we not say of any!—age is Mr. Ruskin. He is, if you like, not seldom dogmatic, self-contradictory, conceited, arrogant, and absurd; but he is a great and wonderful writer! He has created a new literature,—the literature of art. . . . In the fulfilment of his glorious mission, Mr. Ruskin has been assisted by a style singularly clear, rich, and powerful. Every inventor of a new philosophy has in some sort to invent a new vocabulary, and Mr. Ruskin's perfect command of a language surpassing all others, dead or living, except Greek, has enabled him to do this with extraordinary success."

"For all his arrogance, dogmatism, and egotism, he is one of the most delightful and instructive of writers, and this because it is partly from a zealous love and uncompromising assertion of what he believes to be truth, that his arrogance and dogmatism arise; for even error, eloquently advocated with the honest conviction that it is truth, is better than truth coldly believed and languidly proclaimed."

"We value a writer not in proportion to his freedom from faults, but in proportion to his positive excellencies,—to the variety of thought he contributes and suggests, to the amount of gladdening and energizing emotions he excites. Of what comparative importance is it that Mr. Ruskin undervalues the painter or overvalues the other, that he sometimes glides from a just argument into a fallacious one, that he is a little absurd here and not a little arrogant there, if, with all these collateral mistakes, he teaches truth of infinite value, and so teaches that men will listen? The truth of infinite value that he teaches is realism,—the doctrine that all truth and beauty are to be attained by a humble and faithful study of nature, and not by substituting vague forms, bred by imagination on the mist of feeling, in place of definite, substantial reality. The thorough acceptance of this doctrine would remodel our life, and he who teaches its application to any one department of human activity, with such power as Mr. Ruskin's, is a prophet for his generation."—Westm. Rev., April, 1856.

Russell, Rt. Hon. Lord John, M.P., raised to the peerage in 1861 as Earl Russell, third and youngest son of the sixth Duke of Bedford by his first wife, the Hon. Georgiana Elizabeth, second daughter of the fourth Viscount Torrington, was born in Hertford Street, London, August 18, 1792, was educated first at Westminster School and the University of Edinburgh, entered the House of Commons as member for Tavistock in 1813, and soon attained that prominence in the Whig ranks which he has wielded with more or less effect for many years. It is in his literary capacity that he is here to be considered: of his political life details will be found in several of the authorities noticed below.

Russell, Lady Rachel, 1636–1723, second daughter of Thomas Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton, was married first to Lord Francis Vaughan, and after his death, in 1667, she became in 1669 the wife of Lord William Russell, third son of William, first Duke of Bedford. Her constancy to her husband in his misfortunes, her services in court as his amanuensis, and her efforts to save him from the fatal block, together with her Letters, first pub. fifty years after her death, have embalmed her memory in the hearts of thousands. Letters of Lady Rachel Russell, Lon., 1773, 4to; 1774, 8vo, 1792, 8vo, i. p., r. 8vo; 1793, 8vo; i. p., r. 8vo; 6th ed., 1801, 3 vols. 8vo; 7th ed., 1809, 8vo, 1819, 2 vols. in 1, 12mo; 1820, 12mo and 24mo; 1821, 2 vols. 18mo; 1825, 18mo; 1825, 2 vols. 12mo; with additional letters, (see *Lon. Life of Lady Russell, and her Correspondence with her Husband, 1672 to 1682, by Lord John Russell, 1820, 8vo. To these volumes add The Married Life of Rachel, Lady Russell, by M. Guizot, translated from the French, 1855, or. 8vo. This was translated, by desire of the Duke of Bedford and with the sanction of M. Guizot, by John Martin, p. 1231, supra. Another version: Love in Marriage: an Historical Study, by Guizot, translated by Marguerite O. Stevens, N. York, 1864, 16mo.

"It is very remarkable how much better women write than men. I have now before me a volume of letters written by the widow of the beheaded Lord Russell, which are full of the most moving and expressive eloquence. I want the Duke of Bedford to let them be printed."—Horace Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, Oct. 14, 1751: Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, ii. 271. See, also, v. 448, n. 462.

"Her Letters are written with an elegant simplicity, with truth and nature, which can flow only from the heart. The tenderness and constancy of her affection for her murdered lord presents an image to melt the soul."—BISHOP BURNET.

Also commended by Abp. Tillotson and others.

"The sterling excellence and good sense of the widely-famed correspondence of Lady Russell is disguised by many a homely expression and awkward phrase." See Mrs. Stone's Chron. of Fashion, 2d ed., Lon., 1846, ii. 12, n. (q v.)

"Could there be a nobler female figure for an artist than in the scene which another member (Rogers, in his Human Life) of your Commission has well described?

—'There on that awful day,
Counsel of friends, all human help denied,—
All but from her, who sits the pen to guide,
Like that sweet saint who sate by Russell's side
Under the judgment-seat.'"

Rymer, Thomas, 1638 or 1639–1714, a native of Yorkshire, educated at Sydney College, Cambridge, was entered of Gray's Inn in 1666, and appointed Historiographer Royal, 1692. 1. The English Monarch, or, The Tragedy of Edgar, Lon., 1678, '91, '93, 4to. 2. The Tragedies of the Last Age Considered and Examined by the Practice of the Ancients, and by the Common Sense of all Ages, 1678, '92, 8vo. Plays of Beaumont and Fletcher, Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, are handled with little ceremony in this work, and the same canons are enforced in No 4. Pope (Spence's Anec., seot. iv.) considered Rymer "on the whole one of the best critics we ever had." Dryden, (Pref. to his Fables, &c.), Hallam, (Lit. Hist. of Europe, chap. vii.), and Sir Walter Scott (Essay on the Drama) quote him with respect; Johnson (Life of Dryden) was disgusted at his "ferocity;" Sir T. N. Talfourd (Retrospec. Rev., i. 1–15) praises his acuteness at the expense of his judgment; Prescott the historian (Miscellanies, 451, 633) dismisses him with contempt; whilst Lord Macaulay (review of Boswell's Johnson) takes him "to have been the worst critic that ever lived."

"No historical student can possibly proceed with his labours, nor is any historical library complete, without this invaluable collection. The Hague edition may be recommended as the most convenient and valuable."—SIR N. HARRIS NICOLAS: Ob-servs., &c., Record Offices, &c.

A 4th edition—aucta et emendata; accuratibus A. Clarke (J. B. B. Clarke, J. Cayley, Mr. Bayley) et F. Holbrooke—was undertaken by the Record Commission; but, alas! after the publication of only seven Parts, (folio), 1816–30, the project was abandoned. The latest date is 1883. For 500 copies of Pts. 1–6 Government expended £30,388 18s. 4½d. Will not Sir John Romilly procure authority for a new edition in quarto, continued to 1860? Nor should Rymer's fifty-eight vols. of unpublished MSS. in the British Museum, relating to the history and government of England, 1116–1693, be longer withheld from the public. See CARTE, THOMAS. We are happy to add that there has recently been published, (Aug. 1869,) by authority of the Master of the Rolls, Syllabus (in English) of the Documents relating to Eng-land and other Kingdoms contained in the Collection known as "Rymer's Fœdera;" Edited by Thomas Duffus Hardy, Deputy Keeper of the Records. vol. 1, 1066–1377, r. 8vo, pp. cl, xiv, iv., 469, Trübner & Co.

Sir Thomas intends that "Every document in the original collection" shall be "de-scribed, as to its contents, in a few clear and concise phrases. The 'Syllabus' will give, as it were, to everybody the concen-trated essence of the original mass of documents"—Publishers' Advert.

Rymer translated Plutarch's Life of Nicias, and it was pub. in the collection of Plutarch's Lives by several Hands, Lon., 1683–8, 5 vols. 8vo, &c.; he made some other translations from the Greek, Latin, and Italian Poets, which appeared in a miscellany entitled Curious Amusements, &c., 12mo; and he is supposed to be the author of A Life of Thomas Hobbes, apud Eleutherium Anglium sub signo Veritatis, 1681. "At length, upon the coming to the crown of King Ch. I., he was made his advocate, and by him knighted, was engaged in his cause when the grand rebellion broke out, wherein he gave good evidence of his valour, and notwithstanding he was then well stricken in years, yet he received several wounds in fights and skirmishes for his cause. He was accounted a thor-ough-pac'd scholar in all polite learning, was a pure Latinist, and master of a smooth stile. He understood also the common law so well, that he was as fit to plead in Westminster-hall, as in his proper courts, and therefore his, and the assistance of Dr Duck, were required by his majesty at the treaty for peace in the isle of Wight"—*Wood Athen. Sadler, Sadleir, Sadlier, or Sadleyer, Sir Ralph, 1507–1587, a native of Hackney, Middlesex, attained great reputation as a diplomatist. He was for some time keeper of Mary, Queen of Scots, at the Castle of Tutbury. In 1720 The Letters and Negotiations of Sir Ralph Sadler were pub. at Edinburgh, in an 8vo volume; but the contents were subsequently incorporated in the State Papers and Letters of Sir Ralph Sadler, Knight Banneret, edited by Arthur Clifford, Esq., to which is added A Memoir of the Life of Sir Ralph Sadler, with Historical Notes, by Walter Scott, Esq., Fdin. and Lon., 1809, 2 vols. 4to, £5 5s.; 1. p., 3 vols. r. 4to, £8 8s. We have already had something to quote in favour of this publication, (see CLIFFORD, ARTHUR;) but it would not be difficult to cite something on the other side:

"The whole publication bears marks of great negligence and precipitancy on the part of all concerned."—Edin. Rev., Aug. 1810, 447–464.

See, also, an account of Koran Majeed, a splendid Arabic MS., in B. Quatrich's Catalogue, 1859, No. 2540, (priced £60.) A catalogue of Sale's Oriental MSS.—now in the Radcliffe Library, Oxford—was pub. soon after his death. He was one of the founders of a society for the Encouragement of Learning, established in 1736, but seems to have greatly lacked encouragement himself:

"The learned SALE, who first gave to the world a genuine version of the Koran, and who had so seasonally laboured in forming that 'Universal History' which was the pride of our country, pursued his studies through a life of want, and this great Orientalist, (I grieve to degrade the memoirs of a man of learning by such mortifications,) when he quitted his studies too often wanted a change of linen, and often wandered in the streets in search of some compassionate friend who would supply him with the meal of the day!"—Disraeli's Rewards of Oriental Studies: Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1868, 130, n.

Sale, John Bernard, 1779-1866, a native of Windsor, Lay Vicar of Westminster Abbey, 1800, Gentleman of the Chapel Royal, 1803, and organist, 1838, pub. in 1837 a Collection of Psalms, Hymns, and Chants, and composed several pieces of music, (The Butterfly; a duet, &c.) To ordinary readers, Sancroft's memory has been kept alive more by his honest performance of an official duty than by any vitality in the productions of his pen. He was one of the group who witnessed the last agony of the ill-spent life of the second Charles:

"William Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury, an honest and pious, though narrow-minded, man, used great freedom 'It is time,' he said, 'to speak out, for, sir, you are about to appear before a Judge who is no respecter of persons.' The king answered not a word."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of England, chap. iv. (q. v.) Index.

Sanders, Charles W., b. 1805, in Herkimer co., New York, commenced in 1838 the publication of those excellent school-books which have enabled so many millions of our fellow-countrymen to "climb" with comparative ease and pleasure the first ascents of

"The steep where Fame's proud temple shines afar."

We say "millions" have been thus introduced to a knowledge of their vernacular; and we shall not be charged with extravagance when it is considered that of Sanders's Readers more than 13,000,000 copies had been sold to November, 1860, and that the annual sale in 1864 was over 2,000,000 of copies. Of this enormous circulation, if the authority before us be not misinformed, Mr. Sanders has not been an entirely uninterested spectator.

Sanders, or Saunders, Nicholas, D.D., according to Wood "the most noted defender of the R. Cath. cause in his time," was b. at Charlewood, Surrey, about 1527; admitted Fellow of New College, Oxford, 1548; Regius Professor of Canon Law, Oxford, 1557; ordained priest at Rome, 1560, and accompanied Cardinal Stanislaus Hosius to the Council of Trent, "where he shew'd himself to be a man of great parts by his several disputations and arguments;" resided for thirteen years at Louvain as assistant to Sir Francis Englefield, almoner to the King of Spain, who contributed largely to the relief of the "English popish exiles;" died in Ireland, according to Pitts, (De Illust. Ang. Script. set. 16, num. 1025,) in 1580; according to Raehon, (Pref. ad Sanders De Orig. et Progress. Schism., 1585,) in 1581; according to Camden, (Annal. Reg. Elizab. sub an. 1583,) in 1583. Camden asserts that Sanders was one of the priests who instigated Gerald Fitzgerald's (Earl of Desmond) "rebellion," and that "very near at the same instant of time" when the latter was killed the former was "furnished to death;" but all this is very doubtful, and, if true, men have come to their death in less innocent ways than through self-sacrificing devotion to their religion.

Sanders was the author of the following works: 1. The Supper of our Lord set forth in Six Bookes according to the Truth of the Gospell and Catholike Faith, &c., Lovanii, 1565, 4to, 1566, 4to. See Herbert's Typ. Antiq.; W. Strong's (Exeter) Cat. of Divinity, Pt. 3, 1830, No. 9258.

Sanders's book is directed against the views respecting the real presence of Christ in the Sacrament expressed in Jewel's Apology and his Reply, and Alexander Nowell's Challenge. Nowell replied in his Confutation, 1567, 4to, and Dr. William Fulke in an appendix to his Rejoinder to Bristowe's Reply, &c., Lon., 1581, 16mo. 2. The Rooke of the Church, wherein the Primacy of St. Peter and of his Successors the Bishops of Rome is proved out of God's Word, Lovanii, 1566, 1567, 16ma; St. Omer, 1642, 8vo. Answered by Dr. Wm. Fulke. 3. A Brief Treatise of Usury, Lovanii, 1566; 1568, 8vo. 4. A Treatise of the Images of Christ and of his Saints and that it is Unlawfull to Breake them, and Lawfull to Honour them; with a Confutation of such false Doctrine as M. Jewel hath vttered in his Replie concerning that Matter, Lovanii, 1567, 8vo.

"That this work was suppressed, and that it was dangerous to read or have possession of a copy, cannot at all be doubted, thence we account for its rarity." See Butler's English Catholics.

To counteract the influence of this work, Elizabeth framed the Six Questions which were propounded by the Queen's command to all the R. C. missionaries, and to which satisfactory answers were required. Of these Questions the 2d and 5th refer to Father Sanders, and the 5th especially relates to this work. It runs thus:

"Whether the said Dr. Saunders in his books of the Visible Monarchie of the Church (writing in allowance, commendation, and confirmation of the bul of Pius quintus) have therein taught, testified, or maintained a truth or falsehood."

Sanders's book was answered by George Acworth in his De Visibili Rom' monarchia, Lon., 1573, 4to; 1622, 4to; by Bishop John Bridges, in his Supremacie of Christian Princes, 1573, 4to, by Bartholomew Clerke, in his Responsio ad Sanderi Calumnias in Septimo Libro de Visibili Ecclesiæ Monarchia, 1573, 4to; and by William Whitaker, in his *Ad Nich. "Sufficient care has been taken by our learned Bishop Burnet [History of the Reformation] to guard the English Protestant reader against any mistake that this bold romancer might lead him into, by publishing a catalogue and refutation of his calumnies and lies. His style is generally clean and pretty, and his way of telling his tales is facetious enough and pleasant, so that the book may pass, with Arguents and Euphorism, for good diversion, but ought not to be relied on for sound history."—Bishop Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., ed 1776, 95, (q v)

Discourse of the Church, Lon.,

1688, 4to. Pub. by Dr. Wm. Aasheton, (p. 76, supra), from Sanderson's MS. Two Treatises on the Church, by Dr. Jackson and Bishop Sanderson, 1843, fp. 8vo. 9. His Life, by Isaac Walton, with some Short Tracts on Cases of Conscience written by the said Bishop, 1678, 8vo; also 1685, 12mo. The Cases of Conscience are: I. Judgment concerning Submission to Usurpers, [the same as The Case of the Liturgy;] II. Pax Ecclesiæ, [on the decrees of God;] III. Judgment in One View for the Settlement of the Church, [first pub. at end of Reason and Judgment; or, Special Remarks of the Life of Dr Sanderson, &c., Oxf., 1663, 4to;] IV. Reasons of the Present Judgment of the University of Oxford, &c., [ut supra.]

Collective editions of his Sermons, each collection in one folio volume, save that of 1632, which is a quarto: 1626, 12 Serms.; 1632, 12 Serms.; 1666, 20 Serms.; 1667, 14 Serms.; 1660, 34 Serms.; 1671, 34 Serms.; 1681, called 7th edit., 35 Serms., with Life by Walton; 1686, 35 Serms., with Life by Walton; 1689, (also 1687?) called 8th edit., Corrocted and Amended, 36 Serms., with Life by Walton; 1696, 36 Serms., with Life by Walton.

Observe that the edit. of 1689 contains all of the sermons in the preceding edits; but all of the old edits have been superseded by that of 1841, 2 vols. 8vo, which is preceded by Walton's Life of the author, and an Introductory Essay by the Rev. Robert Montgomery. For notices of this edition, see Fraser's Mag., xxiii, 313; Cambridge Jour., Dec. 19, 1840; Irish Eccles. Jour., Dec. 29, 1840, Lon. Times, Dec. 22, 1840, and other British journals of Dec 1840.

To these two volumes of Sermons must be added Christian Ethics: being Selections from the Writings of Bishop Sanderson, 1838, 32mo. Selections will also be found in Wordsworth's Christian Institutes, and in The Voice of the Church.

But we are happy to welcome, at this late day, The Works of Bishop Sanderson, now first collected and edited by Dr. Jacobson, Regius Professor of Divinity at Oxford, Oxf. Univ. Press, 6 vols 8vo, £1 16s., in sheets. Walton's Life of Sanderson is included in the same volume with his Lives of Donne, Wotton, Hooker, and Herbert: last ed., illustrated, with an enlarged Memoir of Walton by William Dowling, Lon., 1857; last Amer. ed. of Walton's Lives, Bost., 1860, 12mo. Walton's Life of Sanderson is also reprinted in Wordsworth's Ecclesiastical Biography, vol. v. To this Life in Zouch's edit., and to Biog. Brit., Bliss's Wood's Athen Oxon., iii, 623–31, Bishop Barlow's Remains, Lloyd's Memoirs, (comments by Archbishop Usher,) Granger's Biog. Hist., and Gent. Mag., lxxi., we refer the reader for notices of this eminent prelate,—so eminent for many good qualities that even old Anthony Wood, seldom carried away by enthusiasm, cannot say enough in his praise:

"Whether you consider him in his writings or conversation, from his first book of logic to his divinity lectures, sermons, and other excellent discourses, the vastness of his judgment, the variety of his learning, all laid out for public benefit, his unparalleled meekness, humility, and constancy, you cannot but confess that the Church of England could not lose a greater pillar, a better man, and more accomplished divine."—Acton. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii, 629.

"The judicious Dr. Sanderson."—ARCHBISHOP USHER. "That clear and solid man, Mr. Sanderson. None states a question more punctually, resolves it more satisfactorily, answers all objections more fully."—BISHOP FAULSTICH.

"The most exact and faithful casuist living!"—BISHOP HALL. "A no less plain and profitable than able and profound casuist."—DR. THOMAS FULLER.

"Sanderson was the greatest casuist in the world."—WILFORD'S Memorials.

"Sanderson was the most celebrated of the English casuists."—HALLAM: Lat. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii, 509.

"What Dr. Sanderson has writ is all gold, and thoroughly refined. His judgment is exquisite, and not a word to be lost."—DR. WOTTON.

"That staid and well-weighed man, Dr. Sanderson, conceives all things deliberately, dwells upon them discreetly, discerns things that differ exactly, passes his judgment rationally, and expresses it aptly, clearly, and honestly."—DR. HAMMOND. "I carry my ears to hear other preachers, but I carry my conscience to hear Mr. Sanderson, and to act accordingly."—KING CHARLES I.

Sir John Hawkins tells us that Dr. Johnson "admired Sanderson for his auteness." See Croker's Boswell's Johnson, chaps. ix., xxiii., lxxxiii.

"Dr. Sanderson, who stands at the head of all casuists, ancient and modern, was frequently consulted by Charles I. . . . His Sermons still maintain their reputation for clearness of reason, and a purity of style which seems to be the effect of it."—GRANGER: Biog. Hist. of Eng., 5th ed., 1824, v, 8.

"There are no sermons more valuable for study, or more to be recommended to a young divine for their sound doctrine and admirable matter, than Bishop Sanderson's."—Irish Eccl. Jour., Dec. 29, 1840.

See, also, FARINON, or FARINGDON, ANTHONY, (extract from British Critic.)

"Bishop Sanderson is more correct in doctrine [than Dr. Henry Hammond]. His works, though not abounding with the grace of the gospel, do not, as far as we have read them, present views opposing that grace. . . . His sermons are rather dry and repulsive, but more correct than some later writers."—Bickerstaff's C. S., 4th ed., 1844, 247, 495.

"His works are truly judicious, but not sufficiently plain and familiar to claim popularity. Bishop Wilkins marks our author as the principal in his list of practical writers."—Dr. Williams's C. P., 5th ed., 1843, 308.

Sanderson, Robert, 1660–1741, Clerk of the Rolls, and Usher of the Court of Chancery, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, pub. in 1704 a volume of translations of Original Letters from William III. whilst Prince of Orange to Charles II. and others, &c.; contributed largely to the compilation of Rymer's Fœdera and prepared for the press vols. xvi.–xx., (see RYMER, THOMAS, No. 8.) and left an unprinted History of Henry V., and other MSS. "This is one of the earliest works against the Slave Trade, and was printed in America (though not stated so,) for which the Chief Magistrate of the Province threatened the Author with a severe penalty if he permitted it to be circulated; but, disregarding all consequences, he distributed it gratuitously wherever he thought it would be read. These circumstances have now rendered it extremely rare."

"About the year 1728 or 1729 I myself printed a book for Ralph Sandiford, another of your Friends in this city, against keeping negroes in slavery; two editions of which he distributed gratis. And about the year 1736 I printed another book on the same subject, for Benjamin Lay, who also professed being one of your Friends, and he distributed the books chiefly among them

By these instances it appears that the seed was indeed sown in the good ground of your profession, though much earlier than the time you mention [1758]".—Benjamin Franklin to John Wright, 4 Nov 1789. Sparks's Franklin, x. 403.

Sandys, or Sandes, Edwin, D.D., 1519–1588, a native of Hawkshead, Lancashire, educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was influenced in favour of the Reformation, was Junior Proctor in 1542, elected Master of Catherine Hall in 1547, and about the same time was Vicar of Haversham, Bucks; Preb. of Peterborough, 1548, and of Carlisle, 1552, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, 1553; imprisoned for preaching in favour of Lady Jane Gray's pretensions to the crown, 1553; in 1554 escaped to the continent, from which he returned on the day of the coronation of Elizabeth; was made Bishop of Worcester, 1559, and of London, 1570, and Archbishop of York, 1576.

A vol. of his Sermons on Various Occasions was pub., Lon., 1585, 4to, (see WATSON, EDWIN, and again (XXII.) in 1616, 4to, with a Life of the Author by T. D. Whitaker, LL.D., in 1812, 8vo; and his Sermons, with some Miscellaneous Pieces, edited for the Parker Society, with Biographical Notice, by the Rev. John Ayre, were pub., Camb., 1841, 8vo.

Sandys, George, 1577–1643–4, seventh and youngest son of Archbishop Sandys, (supra), first saw the light in the archiepiscopal palace of Bishopsthorpe; in 1589 entered at St. Mary Hall, Oxford, and subsequently, Wood thinks, removed to Corpus Christi; from August, 1610, to 1612 or after, travelled extensively in the East, some time after his return to England sailed for America, where he succeeded his brother as Treasurer for the English Colony of Virginia, and on the banks of the James River completed his excellent translation of the Metamorphoses of Ovid, after his second return home, was appointed a Gentleman of the King's Privy Chamber, and lived in great reputation for learning, amiability, and piety, until his death, at Bexley Abbey, Kent, the residence of his niece, Lady Margaret Wyatt.

Chalmers (Biog. Diet., xxvii. 140) says that the plates are mostly copied from the Devotissimo Viaggio di Zuallardo, Rome, 1587, 4to. Dr. Bliss (*Wood's Athen. The work is of peculiar interest as the first elaborate poetical composition of America: see LOAN, JAMES, No. 5.

"It needeth," says Sandys in his Dedication to Charles I., "more than a single denization, being a doublestranger. Sprung from the stock of ancient Romanes, but bred in the New World, of the sadness whereof it can but participate, especially having wars and tumult to bring it to light instead of the Muses, . . . snatched from the howers of night and repose, for the day was not mine, but dedicated to the service of your Great Father, and yourself."

But no such apology was needed—Dryden, although he thinks the version of Ovid too close and literal, calls "the ingenious and learned Sandys the best versifier of the former age," (Pref. to Dryden's Fables,) and esteemed so highly his translation of the First Book of the Æneis as to assert that if Sandys had translated the whole of Virgil he would not have attempted it after him. (Pref. to Dryden's trans. of Virgil: see, also, Cibber's Lives, i. 284; Scott's Dryden.) Pope's admiration of Sandys's Ovid has been already referred to, (Ogilvy, or Ogilvy, John, No. 3: see, also, Spence's Anec., sec. vii; Dr. Johnson's Life of Pope, P. Cunningham's ed., 1864, iii. 5; Warton's Essay on Pope), and it will be remembered that in his Notes to the Iliad he declares that English poetry owed much of its beauty to Sandys's translations. Mr. Sargent's translation of De Colano's Dies Irae was recently brought prominently before the public by the accomplished literary editor of The Press, (Philadelphia, Oct. 27, 1859,) R. Shelton Mackenzie, M.D., D.C.L.; and his poem of A Life on the Ocean Wave (see Living Age, li. 250) has long been a favourite with all classes. Less known than the last-named, but preferred by Mr. Poe, (see The Literati), are A Calm, The Gale, Tropical Weather, (three of the quatorzains entitled Records of a Summer Voyage to Cuba), and the Night-Storm at Sea. The ballad of The Light of the Light-House is another of Poe's favourites. Specimens of Mr. Sargent's poems are given in Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, and in Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Literature. He contributed an Introduction to The King of the Mountains, from the French of Edmond About, by Mary L. Booth, Boston, 1860, (2 edits.,) 12mo, noticed in *N. Amer. Sarjeant, Sargeant, or Sergeant, John, sometimes called Smith, sometimes Holland, b. at Rarrow, Leicestershire, about 1621, admitted of St. John's College, Cambridge, 1639, went over to the English R. Catholic college of secular priests at Lisbon in 1642; returned to England in 1652, became secretary (he was already a priest) of the secular clergy; published about forty controversial volumes or pamphlets, (against Hammond, Bramhall, Thomas Pierce, Tillotson, Casaubon, Taylor, Tenison, Stillingfleet, Whitby, Descartes, Locke, &c.), some under the signature of J. S.; and d. with the pen in his hand, in 1707, in his 86th year. See Birch's Tillotson; Dodd's Ch. Hist.; Other Oxon., (Sargeant; Sargeant;) Watt's Bibl. Brit., (Sergeant.) The writings of this acute reasoner have been greatly neglected; but a few years since attention was called to their value by the publication (in 1860) of Sir William Hamilton's Lectures on Logic.

"His works, however, contain genius more than enough to have saved them, in any other country, from the total oblivion into which they have fallen in this,—where, indeed, they probably never were appreciated."—Uti supra, Appendix X

Sir William especially notices his Metaphysics; Method of Science, (a treatise on logic,) Idea Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, (a criticism on Descartes,) Solid Philosophy, (a criticism on Locke.)

"I have elsewhere had occasion to quote him as the first and one of the ablest critics of the Essay on Human Understanding. In certain views he anticipates Kant, and Pope has evidently taken from his brother Catholic the hint of some of his most celebrated thoughts."—SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON ubi supra.

Saunders, Sir Edmund, d. 1683, "not much turned of fifty," rose from the position of a beggar-boy about the court to be (Jan. 23, 1682-3) a knight and Lord Chief Justice of England. He was famous for his legal learning, and infamous for his knavishness and immorality. After his death appeared:

1. Abridgement of the Statutes 22 Cha. II. cap. 1, on Seditious Conventicles, Lon., 1685, 12mo. 2. Les Reports des divers Pleadings et Cases en la Court del Bank le Roy, en le Temps del Reign de le Roy Charles II. 1686, 2 vols. fol. records in Latin, arguments in French; 2d ed., in French and English,—except the Entries, which were not trans. until 3d ed. by Serj. Williams,—with several thousand References, 1722, 2 vols. fol., 3d ed., with Notes and References to the Pleadings and Cases, by John Williams, Esq., Sergeant-at-Law, 1799-1802, 3 pts., in 2 vols. r. 8vo; 4th ed., 1809, 2 vols. in 3, r. 8vo; repub., Brookfield, 1816 (2d Amer. ed.) and 1825, (3d

"I pressed on to the severe study of special pleading, and, by repeated perusals of Saunders's Reports, acquired such a decided relish for this branch of my profession that it became for several years afterwards my favorite pursuit. . . . Next to a good reporter I hold a good annotator. What were Saunders now worth, but for Williams's notes? What were Coke and Littleton, but for Hargrave and Butler?"—JUDOX STONY Life and Letters, i 74, ii 474

"They have always been esteemed the most accurate and valuable reports of that age, and this is the character which has been repeatedly given of them by the judges in modern times."

"But, with all the praise justly due to the [Serj. Williams's] edition, it is liable to the great objection of making one of the old reporters the vehicle of voluminous dissertations. They introduce perplexity and confusion by their number and length."—1 Kent, Com., 638, 6th ed., 1854

In London our author's first name was accepted as a title,—not refused by His Highness.—and hence "Prince Saunders" was quite a lion at the houses of Sir Joseph Banks, the Countess of Cork, and others: see the Autobiog. Recollections of Charles R. Leslie, 1860, ch. xii.; Life and Corresp. of Wm. Allen.

"Everybody [at Sir Joseph Banks's] asked to be presented to 'His Highness.' I got near, to hear what passed in his circle, and a gentleman, with a star and ribbon, said to him, 'What surprises me is that you speak English so well.' Saunders, who had never spoken any other language in his life, bowed and smiled acceptance of the compliment."—C. R. LESLIE, ut sup.

Saunderson, Nicholas, LL.D., 1682-1739, a native of Thurleston, Yorkshire, became blind from the small-pox at the age of twelve months, but made astonishing progress in the acquisition of knowledge, and in 1707 appeared as a resident of Christ's College, Cambridge, where he distinguished himself by his lectures on the Newtonian philosophy. In 1711 he succeeded Whiston in the Lucasian professorship of mathematics, in 1723 married Miss Dickens, of Coxworth, and in 1728 was made LL.D. After his death appeared: 1. Elements of Algebra, in Ten Books, to which is prefixed an Account of the Author's Life and Character, and his Palpable Arithmetic Decyphered, Camb., 1740-41, 2 vols. 4to. Pub. by his son, John Saunderson.

"The bulky volumes of Dr. Saunderson . . . have little claims to depth, originality, or logical precision, but possess the merit of being eminently clear, methodical, and copious even to diffusion"—Prior JOHN LESTER: 4th Prelim. Dissert. to Encyc. Brit.

Savage, James, b. 1767, at Howden, Yorkshire, in 1790 commenced business in conjunction with his brother William (infra) as a printer and bookseller in his native city. William removed to London in 1797, and James followed in 1803. After editing a paper at Taunton, he left for Dorchester, and for fourteen years superintended the Dorset County Chronicle and Somersetshire Gazette. Whilst in London he was Assistant Librarian of the London Institution, and had Porson as an inmate of his family. (See No. 4.) In early life he was a contributor to the Monthly Magazine, the Universal Magazine, &c., and subsequently to the Gentleman's Magazine, &c. He was also the author of: 1. Savage, James, b. in Boston, July 13, 1784, and graduated at Harvard College, 1803, admitted to the Suffolk Bar, 1807, has filled several public positions; devoted a portion of his time to the promotion of common-school education; published a number of pamphlets; edited three, four, or five volumes of the Massachusetts Society's Collections, Paley's Works, the American State Papers, &c., and (for five years) the Monthly Anthology, contributed papers to the North American Review, (1815, &c.) New England Magazine, (1832, &c.), and pub. the following very valuable works

1. The History of New England from 1630 to 1649; by John Winthrop, First Governor of the Colony of Massachusetts, from his Original Manuscripts With Notes to illustrate the Civil and Ecclesiastical Concerns, the Geography, Settlement, and Institutions of the Country, and the Lives and Manners of the Principal Planters, Bost., 1825-26, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., with Additions and Corrections, 1853, 2 vols. 8vo. The 1st vol. of Winthrop's Journal was pub. at Harv.: in 1790, from the family MSS. The MS. continuations were discovered in 1816 in the tower of the Old South Church in Boston, (see Mass. Hist. Coll., 2d Ser., vol. iv. 200,) and placed in the hands of Mr. Savage, who carefully prepared the whole MS. for publication as above.

"We are glad to find that Mr. Savage has not contented himself with improving on the verbal labours of his predecessor. He has added an Appendix, consisting of a number of authentic letters, and constituting, in our opinion, the most interesting portion of Governor Winthrop's writings, and has enriched the work with a large number of original and able notes."—J. C. GRAY, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1827, 23-27

"For resolute accuracy Savage is untroubled, his like will not soon be found. As we read his notes, we sometimes wish he had hated fanaticism a little less, and been a little more tolerant of bigotry. But on that matter opinions will be divided."—J. G. PALFREY, N. Amer. Rev., April, 1838, 481-82

"The notes of the learned editor add greatly to its interest and value."—CHANCELLOR KENT, Course of Read., ed. 1863, 35

"With learned annotations on the whole work."—EDWARD EVERETT, Orat. and Speeches, ed. 1850, i. 130, n.

"The elder Winthrop has left an imperishable monument of himself in his annals; and the laborious and learned annotations of Mr. Savage have rendered that work, as published in 1825-6, and still more in the new edition of 1853, a complete store-house of our early New England history."—ROBERT C. WINTHROP, LL.D., Life and Letters of John Winthrop, 1864, 6.

2. A Genealogical Dictionary of the First Settlers of New England, showing Three Generations of those who came before May, 1692, on the Basis of Farmer's Register, Little, Brown & Co., 1860-62, 4 vols. 8vo. About twenty years in course of preparation.

"The United States has also produced the most stupendous work on genealogy ever compiled; for when we consider the obscurity of most of those whose names are included in it, their number, and the difficulty of obtaining information respecting them, we do not hesitate so to designate Mr. Savage's 'Genealogical Dictionary of the Early Settlers of New England.' Even Collins's great Peerage and Burke's Landed Gentry must have been far less laborious undertakings."—N. Amer. Rev., July, 1863, 60, (by C. H. Hill, an Englishman)

There has recently been published a History of the Town of Dorchester, by a Committee of the Dorchester Antiquarian and Historical Society, Bost., 1860, 8vo, pp. 672, and Mr. Drake contributed to the number for October, 1860, of the New England Historical and Genealogical Register, a paper of nearly sixty pages on The Founders of New England,—the fruits of a late visit to London. Mr. Savage's services whilst President of the Massachusetts Historical Society, (see his Gleanings for New England History, in Mass. Hist. Coll., 3d Ser., vol. viii.,) and his active agency in the publication of Hutchinson's History, (see Hist. Mag., 1857, 100,) should not lack an honourable mention even in a very brief notice of his literary career. A more detailed account, with extracts from Mr. Savage's Oration before the Town Authorities of Boston, July 4, 1811, (Bost., 1811, 8vo,) will be found in Loring's Hundred Boston Authors, 353-360, and another sketch in the N. Savage, Richard, Jan. 1696–7–July 31, 1743, the reputed child of the Countess of Macclesfield and her paramour Lord Rivers, has, through the medium of his great biographer, secured a literary immortality which neither his ordinary poetry nor his extraordinary story could have gained him. That Steele, Johnson, and his contemporaries generally believed in the identity of the poet with the son of the peeress, is certain, that others—such as Cusack and Boswell, (see Boswell's Johnson, chap. vii.) Galt, (Lives of the Playere), and De Quincey—believed no such thing, we have their own affirmation:

"Let us not be supposed," says the English Opium-Eater, "to believe the lying legend of Savage—he was doubtless no son of Lady Macclesfield's, but an impostor, who would now be sent to the treadmill."—Life of Pope, in Encyc. Brit. repub. in De Quincey's Biog. Essays, Bost., 1861, 166.

But the question of birth and the narrative of his unhappy and disreputable life can be pondered at his leisure by the curious reader, in one of the noblest compositions in which genius ever pleaded for vice or biography paid tribute to friendship. And it is still less incumbent upon us to linger upon the sad details of Savage's miserable career, since the publication (in 1854) of the illustrative notes which Mr. Peter Cunningham, in his edition of Johnson's Lives of the Poets, has appended to the original narration. By the latter the account of Savage, by Aaron Hill, in the Plain Dealer for June 26, 1724, and the life, by Beckingham and another person, published in 1727, 8vo, were superseded, though both are still desirable as bibliographical curiosities.

By the kind offices of Lady Mason, the mother of the Countess of Macclesfield, and Mr. Lloyd, the sponsor of the child, the infant son of the Countess was carefully nursed, and in due time placed in a grammar-school near St. Alban's. Whilst still at this place of instruction, his father, Lord Rivers, died, and, according to Dr. Johnson, was only prevented from leaving the child £6000 by the assurance of the mother that the offspring so unhappily ushered into the world had been removed by death. It is contended by Johnson that the child lived and grew up to be known as Savage the poet: it is argued by others (see references above cited) that the child was really dead, and that Savage was a life-long impostor. After some experience as a shoemaker's apprentice, the youth at a very early life turned his attention to literature; recommended himself to the wits partly by his supposed descent, and not a little by the charms of his conversation; in 1727 was condemned to death for having slain a man in a tavern brawl, and owed his life to the royal clemency obtained by the intercession of the Countess of Hertford; procured from Lord Tyrconnel a pension of £200 a year and a place in his family, on condition of his abandoning a design of exposing the cruelty of his reputed mother; forfeited these advantages by his bad conduct, and was again thrown on his pen for a precarious support; in 1731–2 appealed to Queen Charlotte by verses in honour of her birthday, entitled The Volunteer Laureat, of which six numbers (the first in quarto, the others in folio) were published in as many years, (until the death of the Queen in 1737), and for which he received £50 per annum, in 1739 agreed to retire to Wales upon a pension raised by Pope and other friends, but remained until September, 1742, in Bristol, and on his return to that city from Swansea was thrown into prison for debt, January 10, 1742–3, and there d., August 1, 1743.

For the last four years of his life he subsisted principally on £20 per annum, allowed him by the benevolence of Pope, and upon such sums as he could borrow from friend or stranger. His publications appeared as follows:

1. The Convocation, or a Battle of Pamphlets: a Poem, Lon., 1717, 8vo. On the Bangorian controversy, and against Bishop Hoadly. 2. Woman's a Riddle, 1717, 8vo; 5th ed., 12mo. From the Spanish: it ran twelve nights. 3. Love in a Veil; a Comedy, 1719, 8vo. From the Spanish. 4. The Tragedy of Sir Thomas Overbury, 1724, 8vo. By this he gained considerable reputation and—what he valued at least as much—£100. The Preface contains a "liberal encomium on the blooming excellence of Mr. Theophilus Cibber." 5. Miscellaneous Poems and Translations, by Several Hands, 1726, 8vo, pp. 77. Aaron Hill promoted the subscription and furnished the greatest part of the poems. The Happy Man he published as a specimen. 6. The Bastard; a Poem: Inscribed, with all due reverence, to Mrs. Bret, once Countess of Macclesfield, 1728, 8vo; 5th ed., 1728. This drove the Countess from Bath "to shelter herself among the crowds of London." It is perhaps the best piece of the poet, who chose thus to appropriate a title seldom coveted. 7. The Wanderer; a Moral Poem, 1729. Sold for ten guineas, of which he returned two for a correct impression of the last two sheets.

"This performance was always considered by himself as his master-piece, and Mr. Pope, when he asked his opinion of it, told him that he read it once over and was not displeased with it, that it gave him more pleasure at the second perusal, and delighted him still more at the third. . . . This must be at least acknowledged, which ought to be thought equivalent to many other excellences, that this poem can promote no other purposes than those of virtue, and that it is written with a very strong sense of the efficacy of religion."—DR. JOHNSON's Life of Savage.

"Did you ever read Savage's beautiful poem of 'The Wanderer'? If not, do so, and you will see the fault which I think attaches to Lord Maxwell,—a want of distinct precision and intelligibility about the story, which counteracts, especially with ordinary readers, the effect of beautiful and forcible diction, poetical imagery, and animated description."—Sir Walter Scott to Allan Cunningham, 21st April, 1821. Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. 1.

8. A Poem to the Memory of Mrs. Oldfield, 1730, 4to. 9. Verses occasioned by the Right Honourable the Lady Viscountess Tyrconnel's Recovery at Bath, 1730, fol. 10–15. The Volunteer Laureat, Nos. 1–6, 1731–2–37: vide supra. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1738. Several of the Nos. were pub. in Gent. Mag. 16. Panegyric on Sir Robert Walpole, 1732, fol. 17. The Author to be Let. First pub. in a pamphlet separately, and afterwards inserted in a collection of pieces relating to the Dunciad. 18. A Poem on the Birth-Day of the Prince of Wales, fol. 19. The Progress of a Divine, 1735, fol. Censured in the Weekly Miscellany. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., April, 1735, 213. 20. Of Public Spirit in regard to Public Works, 1737, fol. 21. A Poem Sacred to the Memory of her Late Majesty, March, 1737–8. Many of his minor poetical pieces were pub. in the Gentleman's Magazine, (especially see Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Savage, 426, n.) and in that periodical for February, 1737, 128, will be found his Proposals for Printing, by Subscription, The Works in Prose and Verse of Richard Savage, Esq., Son of the late Lord Rivers. The volume was to be a large octavo, and it is promised that it shall contain "several Pieces in Prose and Verse, humorous, serious, moral, and divine, never before printed." This project "was frequently revived, and, as his proposals grew obsolete, new ones were printed with fresher dates. . . . He at last determined to divide it into weekly or monthly numbers, that the profits of the first might supply the expenses of the next." (Johnson's Life of Savage.)

What the author failed to do was at last accomplished by T. Evans, a bookseller, who in 1775 (reissued in 1777) collected and published, in 2 vols. 12mo, The Works of Richard Savage, Esq., with Johnson's Life of his friend prefixed. Johnson's biography, originally pub. in 1744, 8vo, again in 1767, 12mo, and incorporated in his Lives of the English Poets, has already been sufficiently noticed. We may also refer to the accounts of this unhappy genius in the Biographia Dramatica; Spence's Anecdotes; Lord Brougham's Men of Letters Time of Geo. III., ed. 1855, 321–3; Lord Macaulay's Biographies, 1860, 94, 129; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, ed. 1853, Index; Prof. John Wilson's Works, v., 1856, 235; Tuckerman's Mental Portraits, 1853, 106–124, or his Biog. Essays, 1857, 191–203; Giles's Essays, vol. ii.; N. Engländer, ii. 197; Notes and Queries, 1856, Index, and Mar. 1863, (Richard Savage an Impostor.) Mr. Charles J. Whitehead has also published a novel entitled Richard Sav- age; a Romance of Real Life, Lon., 1842, 3 vols. p. 8vo; again, 1845, 12mo; 1856, 12mo; with which the critic of the London Athenaeum (1842, 931) does not appear to be particularly charmed. But we must not conclude our sketch without a few lines from the partial pen of the poet's illustrious biographer:

"Such were the life and death of Richard Savage, a man equally distinguished by his virtues and vices, and at once remarkable for his weaknesses and abilities. . . . On a bulk, in a cellar, or in a glass-house, among thieves and beggars, was to be found the author of 'The Wanderer,' the man of exalted sentiments, extensive views, and curious observations; the man whose remarks on life might have assisted the statesman, whose ideas of virtue might have enlightened the moralist, whose eloquence might have influenced senates, and whose delicacy might have polished courts. . . . His writings may improve mankind when his failings shall be forgotten"—Johnson's Life of Savage, Cunningham's ed., 393, 411, 440.

His "writings" are now too little known to "improve mankind;" his "failings" can never be "forgotten," so long as the strength and beauty of English prose in its best estate shall attract successive generations of admiring readers.

"In the whole list of our English poets we can only remember Shenstone and Savage—two certainly of the lowest—who were querulous and discontented."—LORD JEFFREY

This is at least as much as the poets have a right to claim!

Savile, Sir Henry, Nov. 30, 1549–Feb. 19, 1621–2, one of the most learned men of any age or nation, a native of Yorkshire, was entered of Brasenose College, Oxford, from whence he was in 1561 elected to Merton College, and became Fellow and subsequently rector.

lectures on mathematics in the University; Proctor, 1575 and 1576; travelled on the Continent, collecting MSS., in 1578, and on his return appointed tutor in Greek and Mathematics to Queen Elizabeth; Warden of Merton College from 1585 until his death; knighted by James I., 1604. In 1611 he founded professorships of Geometry and Astronomy (with a library for their use) in Oxford, and made other benefactions to the University.

1. The Ende of Nero and Beginning of Galba, fower Bookes of the Histories of Cornelius Tacitus; and The Life of Agricola; with Notes, Oxf., 1581, 4to; 1591, fol.; 1598, fol.; in same vol. with No. 3, 1612, fol. The Notes, which also appear in the trans. of the Annals and History of Tacitus by Dryden and others, Lon., 1698, 3 vols. 8vo, 1716, 8 vols. 12mo, were trans. into Latin by Isaac Gruter, and pub., together with Freherus's trans. of No. 3, in 1 vol. 12mo, Amst., 1649. Bolton (Hypercritica) and Wood (Athen. Oxon.) highly commend Savile's trans. of Tacitus. Dr. Adam Clarke calls it a spiritless and jejune performance. Hallam (Lit. Hist., ed. 1854, i. 520) characterises the annotations as "not very copious or profound, but pertinent." Bishop Nicolson (Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 33) styles the Agricola "a most admirable translation and learned notes."

2. Rerum Anglorum Scriptores Bedam; præcipue Will. Malmesburiensis, Hen. Huntingdoniensis; Rogerus Hovedenus; Ethelwerdus, Ingulphus: ex vetustissimis codicibus nunc primum in lucem editi, cum Chronologia, Lon., 1596, fol., 52s. 6d.; some l. p.; Francf., 1601, fol. Each of these editions is called by its respective advocates "the best." The reader can weigh the arguments adduced by Du Fresnoy, Nicolson, (Eng. Hist. Lib.,) Spelman, (voc. Frithborgha,) Dibdin, (Lib. Comp., 154-58.) The last-named authority "strongly recommends" the second, (1601.) The General Index is certainly one great advantage over the London edition.

"We should gratefully commemorate the labours of Sir Henry Savile. . . . Some of the most valuable writers of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries were rescued by his hands from dirt and dust and rottenness, (à situ squale et pulvere.)"—Gibson Angl. Works, ed. 1837, 837.

3. View of Certain Military Matters, or Commentaries concerning Roman Warfare, Lon., 1598, fol.; in same vol. with No. 1, 1612, fol.; in Latin, by M. Freherus, Heidel., 1601, 8vo; again, pub. by Isaac Gruter, with his trans. into Latin of the Notes of No. 1, Amst., 1649, 12mo.

"It contains much information in small compass, extending only to about 130 duodecimo pages. Nor is it borrowed, as far as I could perceive, from Patrizia or Lipsius, but displays an independent and extensive erudition."—Hallam, Lit. Hist. of Europe, i. 528.

4. Nazianzen's Stelitteuties, 1610. He had the use of the MS. Epistles of Nazianzen in the Bodleian Library. Bishop Montagu, in his edition of Nazianzen's In Julianum Inveniens Dux, (Eton., 1610, 4to), drew "ex Bibliotheca Hen. Savillii."

5. S. Joannis Chrysostomi Opera; Græcè cum ejusdem et aliorum Notis, Etonæ, 1610-13, 8 vols. fol., £5 5s. 1000 copies: all disposed of. This great work cost Sir Henry £8000 (£2000 for paper) and vast labour. He acknowledges the assistance of Thuanus, Velserus, Schottius, Isaac Casaubon, Fronto Duceus, Gruter, Hoeschelius, and others: see ALLEN, THOM. BOYS, or BOIS, JOHN; MONTAGU, RICHARD. Sir Henry's Notes are in vol. viii. Fronto Duceus trans. the principal part of the work into Latin, and pub. the six vols. (i.-v., 1621, vi., 1624,) fol., in Greek and Latin, at Paris. They were completed by vols. vii.-x., by other hands, pub. at different times at Heidelberg. A former edit. was pub. by Montfaucon and the Benedictines, Paris, 1713, 13 vols. fol. For later edits. see Brunet, Manuel, ed. Paris, 1861 et seq.

"The Parisian edition came up close to it, and advantaged with the Latin translation (though dearer of price) outstrip it in quickness of sale, but of late the Savilian Chrysostome hath much mended its pace, so that very few are left of the whole impression."—Fuller's Worthies, ed. 1640, iii. 431.

James's Apology for the Oath of Allegiance into Latin,—answered in Francis Suarez's Defensio Fidei Catholice, &c., 1614—was one of the eight Oxford men appointed to execute the king's command for the translation into English of the four Evangelists, the Acts, and Revelation, and left a number of MS. tracts, orations, notes to Eusebius, (used by Valesius in his edit. of 1659,) &c. Six of his Epistles will be found in Lambecius's Bibliotheca, vol. ii., four more in Camdeni Epistolæ, and others in the Cotton and Harleian MSS. Nor should we omit to notice the interesting fact that within the last few months—nearly two centuries and a half since the death of this eminent scholar—portions of his library and of the collections of his father and brother (Sir John Savile, infra) have been dispersed by auction in London: see Lon. Athen., 1860, ii. 571, 912, (Books,) 1861, i. 232, or Amer. Pub. Circ., 125, (MSS.) Lon. Gent. Mag., 1861, i. 443, (Books and MSS.) Fain would we quote some of the prices, but this cannot be: suffice it to say that the 65 MSS. were sold for £3019 4s.

"Mr. Sawyer writes excellent English, and his satirical vein reminds us of Thackeray's, except that it is not at all ill-natured."—DR. R. S. MACKENZIE.

We have before us many other commendations of Mr. Sawyer's three books.

Mr. Sawyer is also known as the originator and President of The Pawnier's Bank, of Boston, an excellent institution, (which should be imitated in all large communities,) designed to furnish facilities at a comparatively low rate of interest to the poorer classes.

Saxe, John Godfrey, LL.D., b. in Highgate, Vermont, 1816; graduated at Middlebury College, 1839, was admitted to the Bar, 1843, and commenced practice at St. Alban's, in his native State. In 1850 he removed to Burlington, Vermont, and for five years successfully conducted The Sentinel in that city. The discharge of the duties of his profession has been occasionally relieved by literary lectures and (if this can be called a relief) by some attention to politics. In both capacities he has prospered: his lectures are crowded; he has been State's Attorney and Deputy-Collector of Customs, and was some time since the Democratic candidate for Governor of Vermont. The best-known of his poetical lectures are Progress, a Satire, (1846) The Rape of the Lock, (1847) The Proud Miss McBride, (1848) The Times, (1849) The Money-King, (1854) Literature and the Times, (1855). He has pub. several collections of his poetry, viz.: 1. Humorous and Satirical Poems, Bost., 1850, 16mo; 17th ed., 1860. See No. 2. This Series, originally pub. at the suggestion of Mr. James T. Fields, of Boston, has been enlarged from time to time. 2. The Money-King, and other Poems, Nov. 1859, 16mo, pp. 182. Nos. 1 and 2 are also pub. together, in 1 vol. 16mo See N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1860, 273, (by C. C. Smith.) Lon. Athen., 1860, ii. 124. Notices of Mr. Saxe and his poems will be found in Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, (see, also, Internat. Mag., Oct. 1851,) Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit.; Cleveland's Comp. of Amer. Lit.; Poets and Poetry of Vermont, West Lit. Mess., (by J. Clement;) Household Jour., Nov. 1860; Trübner's Bibl. Mr. Saxe has contributed to the Knickerbocker, Atlantic Monthly, Great Republic Monthly, Harper's Magazine, &c.

"His verse is nervous, and generally highly finished, and in almost all cases it is admirably calculated for the production of the desired effects."—Dr. R. W. Griswold ubi supra.

We now add to the above list:

3. Poems, Complete, in Blue and Gold, Nov. 1861, &c., 32mo. 4. Poems, Complete, Cabinet edition, Oct. 1864, &c., 16mo. 30 editions of his collected Poems had been issued by May 12, 1866. "In many respects an improvement on all that he has given us hitherto."—Atlantic Mon., July, 1866.

8. The Times, The Telegraph, and other Poems: Complete in One Volume; and including (in the hope of securing English copyright) One Note, not by the Editor of the "Biglow Papers," Lon., Beeton's Companion Poets, Dec. 1865, fp. 8vo, pp. xi., 260, 1s.

"A writer of sparkling and occasionally pungent vers de société, who has for many years enjoyed wide popularity in the United States, and ought to meet with similar acceptance in England. His longer and more laborious productions—the two satires in Popean verse—cannot be mentioned as satisfactory efforts in a kind of poetry in which the attempts have been numerous and the successes very few during the last hundred years."—Lon. Athen., 1866.

Dr. Saxe is now (1869) engaged on a translation of The Clouds of Aristophanes, in the knowledge of which famous satirist we hope, for the sake of American scholarship, he may prove a second Thomas Mitchell.

Schaff, Philip, Ph.D., D.D., one of the most profoundly learned of modern divines, b. at Coire, (Chur),

Canton Graubündten, Switzerland, Jan. 1, 1819, was educated at the college of his native city, afterwards at the Gymnasium of Stuttgart, and in the Universities of Tübingen, Halle, and Berlin; Ph.D. and B.D., University of Berlin, 1841, and D.D. from the same, 1854; Lecturer on Theology in the University of Berlin, 1842; Professor of Church History and Exegesis in (German Reformed) Theological Seminary, Mercersburg, Pennsylvania, 1844 to 1862. To this important position, the duties of which Dr. Schaff so ably discharged, he was called by "the Synod of the German Reformed Church in the United States on the recommendations of Drs. Neander, Hengstenberg, Tholuck, Müller, Krummacher, and others, who had been consulted about a suitable representative of German Evangelical theology for America."—Daykin's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 666, (q. v.)

Neander, indeed, of whom Dr. Schaff has given us such interesting reminiscences, (see his Germany, 261-277,) predicted with confidence the future distinction of his beloved disciple. He was "not disappointed of his hope." before the good tutor closed his eyes in death he was permitted to enjoy the first-fruits of the seeds of that knowledge which he had so assiduously planted. In November, 1862, Dr. Schaff was invited to spend three months at Andover Theological Seminary, to deliver a course of Lectures on Ecclesiastical History, and he occupied that chair until 1867; in 1868 he was elected Professor of Church History in the Hartford Theological Institute.

This eminent scholar has given to the world the following works: 1. The Sin against the Holy Ghost, and the Dogmatical and Ethical Inferences derived from it; with an Historical Appendix on the Life and Death of Francesco Spiera, Halle, 1841, 8vo. In German. 2. James the Brother of the Lord, an Exegetical and Historical Essay, Berlin, 1842, 8vo. In German. Criticised by the author in his History of the Apostolic Church, 378, n. 3. The Principle of Protestantism as related to Romanism and the Present State of the Church, [an Inaugural Address enlarged to a volume,] Chambersburg, 1845, 8vo. In German. In English, trans., with an Introduction, by J. W. Nevin, D.D., (p. 1410, supra), N. York, 1845, 8vo. This work gave rise to what is known as the "Mercersburg Theological movement" in the controversies connected therewith. 4. What is Church History? a Vindication of the Idea of Historical Development; trans. from the German by J. W. Nevin, D.D., Phila., 1846, 12mo. Partially superseded by the Introduction to—5. History of the Apostolic Church; with a General Introduction to Church History, first pub. in German, Mercersburg, 1851, 8vo; 2d German ed., improved, Leipzig, 1854, r. 8vo. In Dutch, by Lublink Weddik, 1857. In English, trans. by Rev. Edward D. Yeomans, N. York, 1853, 8vo, pp. xiv., 684, 2d ed., 1859, Edin., 1854, 2 vols. 8vo, 16s.; red. to 10s. 6d., 1860; new ed., N. York, 1869, 8vo.

"We predict for this work great success, not only in this country, which may in some degree claim it, but in Europe, not excluding the Fatherland of its author. . . . From the first page to the last, we admire the soundness, we may say orthodoxy, of the writer. The literary execution of this work is admirable."—C. P. KRAUTH, D.D., Evangel. Rev., 1851, iii. 107.

The learned critic proved a true prophet: the work was commended, in some cases with qualifications, by Bibl. Sacra, Oct. 1852, and Jan. 1853; Edin. Rev., Jan. 1853, Brit. Quar. Rev.; Jour. of Sacred Lit., (England;) News of the Churches, (England,) Clerical Jour., (England,) Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., ed. 1859, lxxx.; N. Amer. Rev., (see Jan. 1861, 154, by Dr. A. P. Peabody,) N. Engländer, Method. Quar. Rev.; Chris. Rev.; Chris. Mirror; Puritan Recorder, N.Y. Churchman; N.Y. Observer, N.Y. Recorder; Phila. Presbyterian; by Professors C. E. Stowe, W. G. T. Shedd, Alvah Hovey, and E. P. Humphrey; and by the following very eminent authorities:

"This is the first learned theological work in German composed in the United States, and undoubtedly the best published on that subject in that country. I hail the work in both respects, as the harbinger of a great and glorious future. It is worthy of a German scholar, of a disciple of Neander, (to whom the work is dedicated,) a citizen of the United States, and of a believing and free Christian and Protestant. It stands on German ground, but it is none the less original for that."—CHRISTIAN BUNSEN, Hypolytus.

"This book is eminently scholar-like and learned, full of matter,—not of rude materials crammed together for the nonce by labour-saving tricks, but of various and well-digested knowledge, the result of systematic training and long-continued study. . . . Its practical tendency is uniformly good."—JOSEPH ADDISON ALEXANDER, D.D., Bibl. Rep. and Princ. Rev., 1861.

"No work in the English language, with which I am acquainted, covering the same period, can be compared with it."— learning, freshness, and comprehensiveness."—PROF. HENRY B. SWAN, D.D., Union Theolog. Sem., New York.

See, also, No. 6.

To these learned attestations we venture to add our humble testimony to the same effect. Whilst dissenting from the author's premises or conclusions in some instances, it is impossible not to admire his learning, candour, piety, and noble Christian enthusiasm with respect to the triumphs of the past and the glory to be revealed in the latter days.

In 1853, N. York, 8vo, appeared—Apostolic Age: Dr. Schaff's History in regard to the State of the Christian Church in the Middle Ages, by Jacob J. Janeway, D.D. The writer dissents from some of the historian's positions.

6. The Life and Labours of St. Augustine; trans. from the German by the Rev. Thomas C. Porter, N. York, 1854, 12mo; Lon., 1854, 12mo. In German, Berlin, 1854, 12mo.

"Prof. Schaff is well known as the author of a Church History of high merit. The same lucid mind and religious tone of thought which distinguish that book are evident in this lighter work"—Lon. Athen., 1855, 488.

7. America: a Sketch of the Political, Social, and Religious Character of the United States of America, [Two Lectures delivered by request at Berlin, on a visit in 1854,] Berlin, 1854, 8vo. In English, N. York, 1855, 12mo. Part 3 of the English edition consists of an Address before the Frankfort Church Diet, 1854, which was trans. into English by Rev. Prof. Thomas C. Porter, of Franklin and Marshall College, Pa., for the New York Observer. (See Schaff's Germany, 224-6.) Schaff's America is one of the best portraits of the United States yet sketched. It was warmly commended in the N. York Evangelist. See, also, Lon. Athen., 1856, 14.

8. Germany: its Universities, Theology, and Religion; with Sketches of Neander, Tholuck, Olshausen, Hengstenberg, Twisten, Nitzsch, Müller, Ullmann, Rothe, Dörner, Lange, Ebrard, Wichern, and other Distinguished German Divines of the Age, Phila., 1857, 12mo, Edin., 1850, p. 8vo. The author remarks that "this is the first time that he ventures before the public in a work of such size without a translator" yet the New York Observer, in a eulogistic notice of Germany, observes, "Dr. Schaff certainly writes English better than any foreigner within our knowledge." The North American Review also commends the author's English,—remarkable, however, that

"His book is a sketch rather of the Evangelical parties in the Universities and the Church of Germany, than of their actual and complete religious position. As far as it goes, it is reliable, but it does not, as we think, go quite far enough."—July, 1857, 259.

We observe that Prof. Vilmar, of Marburg, has recently pub. a History of German National Literature from the earliest times to the death of Goethe.

9. History of the Christian Church from the Birth of Christ to the Reign of Constantine, A. D. 1-311, N. York and Edin., 1859, 8vo, pp. xiii., 535, 2d ed., 1860: new ed., N. York, 1869. Trans. from the German MS. by the Rev. Edward D. Yeomans, (g. v.)

"This volume seems to us to have all the merits of the author's previous publications, which are too well known to need description here, and which have placed him in the first rank of contemporary writers on Church history, not only in this country, but in Germany and England. The only faults of form or substance, which have struck us on a slight examination, are such as may be charged upon the whole modern school of historiography which Dr. Schaff so creditably represents"—Bibl Rep and Prince Rev., Jan. 1859, 163.

"The most valuable addition which our English theological literature has received for a very long period"—CHARLES F. SCHAEFFER, D.D., Evangel., April, 1859, 588-600.

"Equally well adapted to the needs of the student and the edification of the general reader."—A. P. PARSONS, D.D.: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1859, 273.

"One great charm of Dr. Schaff's book is the pulse of fervent, earnest, unaffected piety which everywhere beats through it."—ROSWELL D. HITCHCOCK: Amer. Theolog. Rev., May, 1859, 318-26. See, also, 392.

Schomburgk, Otto. See SCHOMBURGK, SIR ROBERT HERMANN, No. 2.

Schomburgk, Sir Robert Hermann, Knight, Ph.D., b. June 5, 1804, at Freiburg, Saxony; after some experience in mercantile life in Leipzig in 1823, in Virginia in 1828, and in the island of St. Thomas in 1829, in 1830 resolved to devote himself to those pursuits—botany and other branches of natural history, &c.—in the cultivation of which he gained such high distinction. Accounts of his scientific explorations will be found in Men of the Time, N. York, 1852, 488; English Cyc., iv, 1857, 335, Vapereau's Dict. Univ. des Contemp., Paris, 1858, 1664; Lon. Athen., 1843, Index; see, also, 1861, i. 86; 1862, i. 729, ii. 113. He was British Consul at St. Domingo, 1848–51, and appointed Consul at Bangkok, Siam, in 1857, returned to Europe in 1864, was confined to bed the whole winter at Berlin, and d. there, March 11, 1865. 1. A Description of British Guiana, Geographical and Statistical, Lon., 1840, 8vo.

Sir Robert's contributions to the Transactions of the London Botanical Society—especially his account of his discovery of the Victoria Regia Water-Lily on the Berice River, British Guiana, Jan. 1, 1837—are well worth the attention of the naturalist,—who must also consult the following monographs of plants discovered by him: I. Rapatea Frederici Augusti et Saxo-Fridericia Regalis, Brunswick, 1845, 4to; II. Bauhaecia Alexandrina et Alexandra Imperatricis, 1845, r. 4to. Schoolcraft, Henry Rowe, LL.D., a son of Colonel Lawrence Schoolcraft, of the American Revolutionary army, and the great-grandson of James Calcraft, (such was the ancient patronymic of the family,) who emigrated from England during the wars of Queen Anne, was born in Gunderland, near Albany, N. York, March 28, 1793, studied for some time in Union College, and at an early age commenced that course of geographical exploration and archaeological research which conferred such merited distinction on his name. In 1822 his eminent services were recognized by governmental appointment of Agent for Indian Affairs on the Northwestern Frontiers; and a residence of nearly twenty years at Michilimackinac, varied by occasional journeys through the surrounding regions, afforded abundant opportunity for his favourite investigations into the history, traditions, customs, and philology of the Indians of North America. In all, Mr. Schoolcraft spent thirty years among the Indians: see No. 36, infra. From 1828 to 1832 he was a member of the Territorial Legislature; in 1828 organized the Michigan Historical Society; and in 1832 founded the Algic Society at Detroit. In 1841 he removed to New York, in 1842 visited England and the Continent, and in 1845 was employed by the Legislature of New York to take a census of the Six Nations, (Indian tribes: see No. 26, infra.) He was twice married: in 1823 to Miss Johnston, a granddaughter of Waboojeeq, the Indian chief of Lake Superior, (Algoma); in 1847—five years after the death of his first wife—to Miss Mary Howard, of Beaufort, South Carolina. After his second marriage he resided in Washington, D.C., until his death, Dec. 10, 1864. Further biographical details respecting Mr. Schoolcraft will be found in the manuals of Dr. Griswold, (Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 26, 44, 298, 538, see, also, Internat. Mag., iii. 300; Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1857, 167,) and the Cyclopædia of Messrs. Duyckinck, ii. 151, and Supp., 45; Amer. Ann. Cyc., 1864, 744; and Dr. G. W. Samson's Sermon on his Death, 1864. But this indefatigable explorer and laborious student has himself best recorded his biography in the invaluable publications which contain the results of his researches. Of these we subjoin a chronological catalogue.

New edition of vols. I.-V., 1856, under the title of Ethnological Researches respecting the Red Men of America: Information respecting the History, Condition, and Prospects of the Indian Tribes of the United States. Part VI., a sort of résumé of Parts I.-V., is yet a complete work in itself. A great authority, writing after the publication of Parts I.-III., remarks,

"It may fairly be said that by this great national and Christian undertaking, which realizes the aspirations of President Jefferson and carries out to their full extent the labours and efforts of a Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. Albert Gallatin, the Government of the United States has done more for the antiquities and language of a foreign race than any European Government has hitherto done for the language of their ancestors. Certainly scarcely any single man has done more for collecting and digesting the materials than Mr. Schoolcraft, whose own observations and inquiries form the most important part of that publication"—*CHRYSLER BURNES. On the other hand, a critic (Professor Francis Bowen) in the North American Review for July, 1853, 245-262, after an examination of Parts I.-III., all then published, remarks, in conclusion,

"The appropriation of nearly thirty thousand dollars a volume for the ill-digested and valueless compilation that lies before us, rich though it be in its exterior and costly in its illustrations, is enough to discredit the whole system of publishing works at the government expense. We have done our share in exposing the nature of the evil: it is for Congress to do the rest. We have the highest authority for stating that Baron Humboldt, having had occasion to examine the work, expressed in strong terms his opinion that it was a crude and worthless compilation, and his great surprise that it should be allowed to appear with the sanction and at the expense of the government of the United States."—262.

Schweinitz, Lewis David de, Ph.D., a Moravian divine, b. at Bethlehem, Pa., 1780, and educated in Germany; d. at Bethlehem, 1834. As a naturalist he devoted himself chiefly to the more abstruse parts of botany, giving an impulse to the study of American fungi in particular. He added nearly 1400 new species (of which 1200 were American fungi) to the stores of botanical science. 1. Conspectus Fungorum in Lusitaniæ Superioris agro Niskiensi crescentium e Methodo Persooniana; cum Tabulis XII. sensus plotis, Species novæ XCIII. sistuntibus, Leipzig, 1805, 8vo. Scoresby, William, D.D., 1790–1857, son of the preceding, from his tenth year his father's companion at sea, and in 1811 his successor in the command of the "Resolution," entered Queen's College, Cambridge, in 1823; received holy orders in 1826; settled as Chaplain of the Mariners' Church, Liverpool, and subsequently became minister at Hull. The last years of his life were spent at Torquay, where he divided his time between scientific pursuits and philanthropic labours. In the prosecution of his magnetical investigations, shortly before his decease, he made a voyage round the world in the "Royal Charter," sailing from Plymouth, February 16, 1856, and anchoring in the Mersey, August 14 of the same year, (see No. 17, infra.)

The Discouerie, of Witchocraft, 1584, 4to, some 1. p.; 2d ed., 1651, 4to; 3d ed., 1665, fol. Also trans. into French and German. This treatise, which attacked the belief in witches, astrology, alchemy, legerdemain, and other generally-received opinions, was assailed from time to time with great severity. James I. ordered all the copies of the 1st edition that could be found to be burnt, (vide Vogt. Cat. Lib. Rar., p. 617,) and asserts that he wrote his Demonologie "chiefly against the damnable opinions of Wierus and Scot," (Preface;) Meric Casaubon treats Scot as an illiterate person; and Dr. John Rainoldes, (Prælectiones upon the Apocrypha), Joseph Glanvil, (g. v., Nos. 8 and 10,) and Richard Bernard, (Guide to Grand Jurymen), all take the skeptic to task. Notices of Scot's Discouerie will be found in Bliss's *Wood's Athen. 3. Appendix ad Thesaurum Linguae Graecae H. Stephani et ad Lexicon Constantini et Scalpulae, 1745-46, 2 vols. fol. These volumes, the results of the labours of many years, do the author great credit: profit he had none—indeed, he lost several hundred pounds by the few copies which were published. Barker's edition of Stephen's Thesaurus we have already chronicled, (p. 121, supra); but, since that notice was written, C. B. Hase and L. and W. Dindorf's new edition, Paris, 1831-54, 8 vols. fol., has claimed the attention of scholars. See a notice of this excellent work in Brunet's Manuel, 5th ed., ii. (1861) 1079. For a notice of Scott, see No. 1, ad. 1779. Dr. Doddridge calls him "the learned, ingenious, and accurate." See SCOTT, JOSEPH NICHOL; SCOTT, THOMAS, OF NORWICH.

Scott, George Lewis, b. at Hanover, where his father resided in a public capacity, became sub-preceptor in Latin to George III. when Prince of Wales, subsequently a Commissioner of Excise, and d. 1780. For his services as co-editor of and contributor to the Supplement to Chambers's Cyclopædia, 2 vols. fol., (see CHAMBERS, EPHRAIM; HILL, SIR JOHN, M.D.) he received the sum of £1500. He was a good mathematician, and will be remembered by the reader of Gibbon's Miscellaneous Works as the adviser, in this department of science, of the historian of Rome. See Hutton's Dict.; Cens. Lit., vols. i., ii.

Scott, Mrs. George Lewis, (Sarah,) wife of the preceding, and sister of Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu, (p. 1841, supra), after separating from her husband on account of a "disagreement of tempers," took up her abode with Lady Bab Montagu, (sister of Lord Halifax,) and continued this connection until the death of the latter. Mrs. Scott died in 1795. She pub. several novels, &c., Lon., 1750-76, all without her name, (of which the Life of T. A. D'Aubigné, 1772, 8vo, is perhaps the best,) and a once well-known work under an assumed name: see RAYMOND, HENRY AUGUSTUS. Refer to Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxvii. 278, *Lon. Gent. "A clergyman of great sanctity, and author of the Christian Life, a treatise once widely renowned."—LORD MACAULAY Hist. of Eng. chap. xiv.

"Practical, but generally wanting in evangelical views, yet with some fine thoughts on Christ's regal acts"—BICKERSTETH'S C. S. 4th ed., 502

His Certain Cases of Conscience on Public Forms of Prayer were pub., Lon., 1683, 2 Pts., in 2 vols. 4to, and repub. in the Collection of Cases, 1685, 4to, (3d ed., 1718, 3 vols. 8vo,) his Examination of Bellarmine's Eighth Note, and treatise on Prayer in an Unknown Tongue, were pub. together in 1 vol. 8vo in 1688, and repub. in Gibson's Preservative, iii. 337, vii. 1; and 3 vols. of his Practical Discourses were pub. 1697–8, 1704; again, 1739, 2 vols. 8vo.

"His Sermons are valuable, especially those in the first volume. His style, on the whole, is excellent, his reasoning strong and conclusive."—DR. DONDERDORP.

A collective edition of his Whole Works was pub. in 1701, 2 vols. fol., another in 1718, 2 vols. fol., and the last at Oxford, Clarendon Press, in 1826, 6 vols. 8vo, £2 8s. Vols. i.–v. contain The Christian Life, 5 vols. 8vo, and the Practical Discourses, 3 vols. 8vo, vol. vi. is composed of five additional Practical Discourses, and Dr. Zachary Igham's Funeral Sermon on the author. Dr. Igham declares that his subject possessed "all those graces and virtues which make the good Christian and the good man;" and Anthony Wood testifies that "He was a common father to the persecuted and afflicted, a true, steadfast, and a faithful friend. His eloquent, solid, and fervent preaching commanded the applauses of men, and his constancy in it procured their love."—Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iv. 415. See, also, Biog. Brit.

Scott, John, 1730–1783, the son of a London draper, a member of the Society of Friends, (to which persuasion the son also adhered,) in his tenth year removed with his father's family to the village of Amwell, Hertfordshire, which he celebrated by his pen and benefited by his services. For the particulars of his uneventful career we must refer to the sketch of his life by Mr. Hoole, prefixed to No. 8, infra. 1. Four Elegies, [on the Seasons,] Descriptive and Moral, Lon., 1760, 4to. Anon. Praised by Dr. Young, Mrs. Talbot, Mrs. Carter, and several of the reviews: see Lon. Month. Rev., July, 1760, 68; May, 1776, 383.

"Mr. Scott of Amwell's Elegies were lying in the room. Dr. Johnson observed, 'They are very well; but such as twenty people might have written.'"—Boswell's Johnson, chap. xlix, (q. v.)

2. Observations on the Present State of the Parochial and Vagrant Poor, 1773. 3. A Digest of the Highway Laws, 1773, 8vo. Incorporated with No. 5, infra. 4. Amwell; a Descriptive Poem, Lon. and Dubl., 1776, 8vo. Anon. Commended by Lon. Month. Rev., July, 1776, 383. The poet "fondly hoped to immortalise his native village;" but the song is now forgotten, and the singer known to many only by name. 5. A Digest of the Highway and General Turnpike Laws, Lon., 1778, 8vo. See No. 3. Very useful in its day. 6. Poetical Works, 1782, 8vo; also 1788, 8vo. Illustrated by engravings by Bartolozzi, Sharpe, &c. The volume contains The Elegies and Amwell, together with pieces now first printed: I. Amosæan Eclogues; II. Oriental Eclogues; III. Odes; IV. Epistles; V. Sonnets; VI. Miscellaneous Pieces. Of all this large collection, perhaps the only lines now generally known are those entitled An Ode on Hearing the Drum:

"I hate that drum's discordant sound,
Parading round, and round, and round," &c.

The Monthly Review, still "faithful found," was prompt to bestow its usual generous praise on the bard; but not so polite was the Critical Reviewer, whose railery provoked the amiable poet to put forth a very ill-advised and egotistical (7) Letter to the Critical Reviewers. An interesting notice of this unhappy business will be found in Disraeli's Calamities of Authors, (chapter on Undue Severity of Criticism) it was copied by Professor Wilson in Blackwood's Magazine, xii. 770–71. This paper of Wilson we have already referred to in our account of Bernard Barton, (p. 136, supra.)

"Scott of Amwell," remarks the critic, "was, we believe, rather a popular versifier in his day, but he was far inferior to Mr. Barton. He was rather given to drivelling, and did not fully and freely exercise the little power he possessed."

Again:
"There was Scott o' Amwell, wha wrocht some simplish things in a preservin' speerit o' earnestness"—The Shepherd Noctes Ambrosæ, April, 1831, 699

See, also, Southey's Letter to Bernard Barton, Jan. 21, 1820, in Southey's Life and Correspondence, chap. xxv.; Lon. Quar. Rev., xi. 500, by Southey; Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 322; and No. 8, infra. Some of his poems will be found in Chalmers's new edition of Johnson's English Poets, 1810, 21 vols. r. 8vo. About two years after his death appeared—8. The Critical Essays of John Scott of Amwell, with his Life, by John Hoole, (see p. 882, supra), 1785, 8vo.

"His Critical Essays contain some judicious remarks on Denham and Dyer, but his verbal strictures on Collins and Goldsmith discover a miserable insensibility to the soul of those poets. His own verses are chiefly interesting where they breathe the pacific principles of the Quaker."—Campbell's Essay on English Poetry, ed. 1848, 346

We should not forget to state that our author published answers to Dr. Johnson's three pamphlets, Patriot, False Alarm, and Taxation no Tyranny, and contributed to the Gentleman's Magazine his first poetical essays, and some letters adverse to the authenticity claimed by Chatterton for the so-called Poems of Thomas Rowley. Scott had many friends, was twice married, and in the social circle and at the fireside was one of the most amiable and agreeable, as in the discharge of his self-imposed and self-denying public employments he was one of the most useful, of men. Let the memory of such be held "in everlasting remembrance!"

Scott, John, the editor of the London Magazine, commenced by him in January, 1820, was fatally wounded at the age of 37, by Mr. Christie, in a duel at Chalk Farm, by moonlight, February 16, 1821, in consequence of a literary quarrel carried on between Blackwood's Magazine and Christie's periodical. Scott died
Feb. 20. Unfortunately, the murderer was not hanged, as all murderers should be. The details of this foolish and wicked affair will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1821, i. 271, 369; Blackw. Mag., xix., Pref., xvi., Letters,
&c. of Charles Lamb, by Sir T. N. Talfourd, chap. vii.,
Noctes Ambros., by R. S. Mackenzie, i. 133, n. iii., viii.
"Such," well remarks Talfourd, "was the melancholy result—first of a controversy too unenvenomed—and afterwards of en-thalment in usages absurd in all, but most absurd when applied by a literary man to a literary quarrel!"—ubi supra.

Scott, Sir Michael, celebrated as a scholar, astrologer, alchemist, magician, and wizard, was b. in Scotland about 1214; studied at Oxford and Paris; resided for some years at the court of the emperor Frederick II. in Germany; subsequently engaged in public life in England, and finally retired to his native country, where he died, probably between 1295 and 1300. Whether he was the same man as Michael Scott of Balwirie, or whether he died in 1291, according to the common statement, and other mooted points connected with his career, may perhaps be determined by the curious reader when he has endeavoured to digest the versions of Boethius, Camden, Dempster, Mackenzie, and other ancient authorities, and the modern summaries in Edin. Mag., 1820, and English Cyc., v. 1857, 366. See, also, Recher. crit. sur l'Age et l'Origine des Traductions Latines d'Aristote, par M. Jourdain, nouv. 6d., Paris, 1843; Milman's Lat. Chris., Lon., vol. v., b. x., ch. iii., vol. viii., b. xiv., chs. i., iii.; Serape's Days and Nights of Salmon-Fishing, ch. viii. The following works are attributed to Sir Michael: 1. Avicennam de Animalibus ex Arabico in Latinum transtulit, fol., s. a. et l. Dempster mentions Abbreviationes Avicennae in one book, and also De Animalibus ad Casarem (i. e. Frederick) in one book. 2. Aristotelis Opera, Latine versa, partim e Græco, partim Arabico, per Vires Lectos et in utriusque Lingue prolatione peritos, jussu Imperatoris Frederici II., Venet., 1496, 2 vols. fol. If Hallam had examined this title-page, he would not have so hastily adopted (Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 93) the ascription of Meiners, (Verg. der Sitten, ii. 664.) See, also, Watson's Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, i., cxxxv., li. 90. 3. De Procreatione et Hominis Phisionomia Opus, s. l., 1477; 1480; 1487; Paris, 1508, 8vo. Other edits., both in 4to and 12mo, s. a. It was printed, under the title of De Secretis Naturæ, at Strasbourg, in 1607, 16mo, and at Frankfurt, 1615, 16mo, and with the works of Albertus Magnus at Amsterdam, 1655 '62, '65, '69, 12mo Bayle had an Italian trans.

6. Eximii atque excellentissimi Physicorum Motuum cuiusque Syderii investigatoris, Mich. Scotti super auctor. Sphærar., &c. This commentary on the De Sphæra of Sacrobosco, said to be a mere compilation, is supposed to be improperly attributed to Scott; and the authorship of a number of other works chroniced by Dempster is equally apocryphal. Camperius, Roger Bacon, and Cornelius Agrippa are among the panegyrists of Scott; John Pious assails him in his work against astrology; and Naude defends him in his Apologie pour les grands Personages fausement accusés de Magie; he is introduced in the writings of Boccaccio, the Inferno of Dante, and the Lay of the Last Minstrel of his illustrious modern namesake. See, also, Captain Walter Soot's True History of the Families of Soot.

"His too great Curiosity in these Matters [Knowledge of the Stars and Physical Matters] made the Vulgar look upon him as a Magician, tho', as Johannes Daconthorpus observes, there is none that speaks or writes more respectfully of God and Religion than he does"—MACKENZIE ubi supra.

Scott, Michael, 1789–1835, a native of Glasgow, educated at the High School and the University of that city, was engaged in the management of several estates in Jamaica from 1806 until 1810, when he joined a mercantile house in Kingston. He returned home in 1817, was married in 1818 and returned to Jamaica, but in 1822 settled permanently in Scotland. In 1829 he commenced the publication in Blackwood of those brilliant papers known as Tom Cringle's Log and The Cruise of the Midge. These were subsequently collected into volumes: repub.: Tom Cringle's Log, Phila., 1833, 2 vols. 8vo, N. York, 8vo; Cruise of the Midge, Phila., 1834, 8vo; N. York, 8vo; also trans. into German: last Edinburgh edit., 1868, 12mo, each. They were warmly commended by the London Quarterly Reviewer, ("the most brilliant series of magazine papers of the time,") Coleridge, in his Table-Talk, ("most excellent,") John Wilson, in Noctes Ambrosianæ, October, 1832, 695, ("Cringle indeed is a giant,") and by many others: yet to no one, not even to Wilson or Blackwood, was the name of the author known until after his death. Among those to whom the authorship was ascribed were Captains Chamier and Marryat, and Professor Wilson. See Index to Blackw. Mag., vols. i.–l., 1855, 121, 537; Lon. Month. Rev., cxxxii. 411; Amer. Month. Rev., iv. 299; Preface to Tom Cringle's Log in Blackwood's Standard Novels, (notice of Scott.)

"Two books which we never fail to peruse every year are 'Tom Cringle's Log' and the 'Cruise of the Midge,' in which humour and pathos, the most gorgeous descriptions and the most thrilling narrative, so marvellously intermingle."—Lon. Lit. Journal, 1857.

"This is an elegant work. The notes are not, in general, accurate. Scarcely any thing of a doctrinal nature occurs in them. Mr. Scott was the author of some critical papers in Priestley's Theological Repository"—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 392.

Scott, Thomas, D.D., the Commentator, 1747-1821, the tenth of the thirteen children of a Lincolnshire grazier, after an unsatisfactory probation for two months as a surgeon's apprentice and for nine years as a farm-labourer, acquired an education by untiring assiduity; in 1772 was made a deacon, and in 1773 received priest's orders from Dr. Green, the Bishop of Lincoln. He subsequently experienced a spiritual change through the influence of the Rev. John Newton, of Olney, and was distinguished through life by his eloquent advocacy of those great religious doctrines the efficacy of which he had so thoroughly tested in his own person. Shortly after his ordination he was appointed Curate of Weston Underwood: in 1780 succeeded John Newton at Olney; in 1785 accepted the situation of Lecturer of Lock Hospital, London, to which was soon added a Sunday-morning and weekday lectureship in the metropolis, and from 1803 until his death was Rector of Aston Sandford, Buckinghamshire. He received the degree of D.D. from Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1807. 1. The Force of Truth: a Marvellous Narrative of Human Life, Lon., 1779, 12mo; 8th ed., 1811. 10th ed., Edin., 1816, 12mo; new ed., with Illustrations by [his son] John Scott, Lon., 1824, sm. 8vo; N. vols. 4to: stereotyped. Such is the accepted enumeration, (see Horne's Bibl. Bib., 258; Orme's Bibl. Bib., 392;) but a register of title-pages would seem to exhibit the following sequence: 1st ed., 1788-92, 5 vols. 4to; 2d ed., .796, 4 vols. 4to; 3d ed., 1803, 4 vols. 4to; 4th ed., 1805-9, 5 vols. 4to; 5th ed., 1810, 6 vols. 4to; 6th ed., 1816, 6 vols. 4to; 7th ed., 1819, 5 vols. 4to; 8th (above called 5th) ed., 1822, 6 vols. 4to.

"Mr. Scott's biographer, [his son John,] writing in 1823, [1821 or 1822?] says, 'Besides the English editions, up to this time amounting to 12,000 copies, I have received the particulars of eight editions printed in the United States, at Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and Hartford, from the year 1808 to 1819, amounting to twenty-five thousand two hundred and fifty copies. The retail price of the English copies would amount to the sum of 67,000l.; that of the American copies, to 182,000l.; making together 199,000l. Probably no theological work can be named which produced by its sale during the Author's lifetime an equal sum.' Since 1823 a vast number of editions have been printed, both in England and America, and the aggregate sum already expended by the public for copies of this great work must considerably exceed five hundred thousand pounds."—Prospectus of the edition of 1850, 6 vols. 4to, by Messrs. Seeley & Co. and Messrs. Hatchard & Co., London, May 30, 1849

This edition was preceded by impressions, each in 6 vols. 4to, in 1835, 1839, and 1841, and succeeded by impressions, each in 6 vols. 4to, in 1852, 1856, and 1861. The plates were purchased in 1852 from Seeley, Hatchard & Nisbet, by Wertheim & Macintosh, also of London, who (now Wertheim, Macintosh & Hunt) still publish the work. The American reprint of this edition (1850, 6 vols. 4to) was issued in 1855, 5 vols. 4to, by Wm. S. Martien, of Philadelphia, and is now pub. by Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co., of the same city. It was asserted that up to 1855 there had been sold in England and America 100,000 copies of this valuable work. To these must be added (we know not how many) copies of a translation into French. The price of the London editions, formerly eight guineas, is now three guineas. There was also pub in 1830, London, 3 vols. imp. 8vo, an edition of the Commentary, with a Selection and Abridgment of the Notes, and a new arrangement of the Practical Observations, edited by the Rev. Josiah Pratt, (assisted by his father, Rev Josiah Pratt, Sr.,) without the Marginal References, Renderings, (some are retained,) and Philological Notes, and in this incomplete state impressions, each in 3 vols. imp. 8vo, were issued in 1834, 1841, 1847, and 1860. Another edition of the Commentary, edited, with Notes, by Rev William Symington, D.D., of Glasgow, was pub in 1845-49, in 25 Pts. r. 4to,—bound in 3 vols., and Fisher's Illustrated Edition, in 3 vols. 4to,—with 42 plates, 42s., with 140 plates, 70s.,—was pub. in 1849. The Holy Bible, with the Practical Observations extracted from the larger work, was pub. in 1834, 2 vols. r. 8vo, Phila., 1844, 8vo. The abridged edition of Henry and Scott pub by the London Religious Tract Society (repub. in N York) has been already noticed in our life of HENRY, MATTHEW, p. 824, supra: a new edition was put to press in 1860. Nor should we omit to mention The Practical and Devotional Family Bible, being the Authorized Version, with the Commentaries of Henry and Scott, condensed by the Rev. John McFarlane, LL.D., Glasgow, London and Glasgow, 8th ed., 1859. A Topical Index to Scott's Commentary, pub. in 1842 in 4to and imp. 8vo, sold separately at 6s. and 4s.; but this, together with 15 Maps and 69 Illustrations of Scripture Scenery, are all bound up with the excellent edition of Wertheim, Macintosh & Hunt. But let the last edition (1869, 3 vols. r. 8vo) of Kitto's Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature, and Dr Wm. Smith's New Dictionary of the Bible, accompany the Commentary. Surely this formidable array of editions may excuse the absence of formal certificates to the value of Scott's Commentary: yet a few words of earnest commendation, from eminent authorities, shall not be withheld:

"The capital excellency of this valuable and immense undertaking, perhaps, consists in following more closely than any other the fair and adequate meaning of every part of Scripture, without regard to the niceties of human systems. It is, in every sense of the expression, a scriptural comment. It has likewise a further and strong recommendation in its originality."—BISHOP DANIEL WILSON, of Calcutta, Serms., preached April 29, 1821, occasioned by the death of the Rev. Thomas Scott, 3d ed., 38-35, 68.

After quoting this and much more from Bishop Wilson, Dr. T. H. Horne adds, "To the preceding just character of this elaborate commentary, the writer of these pages (who does not view all topics precisely in the same point of view with its learned author) deems it an act of bare justice to state that he has never consulted it in vain on difficult passages of the Scriptures," &c.—Horne's Bibl. Bib., 259.

In the Life of Daniel Wilson by Josiah Bateman, 1866, 2 vols. 8vo, we find that Scott's Commentary retained its favour with the good bishop. On his voyage to India in 1832, he remarks,

"Father Scott's comment is my companion—wholesome, arousing, nourishing my inmost soul," and at a later day he writes, "But, after all my new authors, I turn back to my old commentator, Scott, with a fresh zest. I am now in Mesekiel, in my annual course; and I sit with astonishment at many of his grave and deep remarks, and I hope, turn them into prayers. That book is not yet sufficiently valued. I have now been reading him for forty years, and my judgment is that he surpasses all other commentators by far, with the single exception of the incomparable John Calvin, who, considering the age when he wrote, stands a prodigy of sound interpretation of inspired Scripture and of real learning."—1860, 8vo

"I believe it exhibits more of the mind of the Spirit in the Scriptures than any other work of the kind extant."—REV. ANDREW FULLER, of Kettering.

"I never like to preach a sermon without having seen what Scott says about it. If he takes the same view, I consider then that I am tolerably safe."—REV. J. HARRINGTON EVANS: Memoirs of Rev J. J. Evans, 1852, 8vo.

"If Scott's Bible might be diligently and seriously perused, and its spirit imbibed, by every family throughout this country, the consequences as to their temporal and eternal welfare would be most happy."—REV. PROFESSOR LEONARD WOODS, of Andover.

"His Commentary was a noble gift to the Church of Christ, and furnishes us with the solid interpretation of a man of a powerful mind and great good sense, giving his own views wisely, freely, and plainly. . . . An original, sound, evangelical, and practical Commentary, with a vast collection of parallels. Least satisfactory on the prophecies."—Bickersteth's C. S., 4th ed., 321, 394.

"The Commentary, as a whole, is distinguished by many important qualities, and is not likely to be soon superseded. . . . There is an invariable combination of pointed, practical instruction with doctrinal illustration. If the reader apply to it for the solution of minute critical difficulties, or the removal of obscurities which attach to many of the terms and phrases of Scripture, he will often be disappointed. The scope of a difficult paragraph is often substantially given, when the minor difficulties are neglected. Indeed, no man who writes a commentary on the Bible can be expected to do justice to all its parts, or to study the innumerable allusions, idioms, and other peculiarities which belong to so extensive and so varied a composition as the Scriptures."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 393

"The thirst of praise or of wealth was quenched by a desire as simple and as pure as ever prompted human activity to promote the Divine glory and the good of man. He would have seen the labours of his life perish, and would have perished with them, rather than distort the sense of revelation by a hair-breadth from what he believed to be its genuine meaning. He rendered to his party (if with such a man party can be fitly associated) the inestimable service of showing how their distinguishing tenets may be deduced from the sacred canon or reconciled with it, and of placing their feet on that which Obil-ingworth had proclaimed as the rock of the Reformation."—SIR JAMES STEPHEN: *Edin. Scott, Sir Walter, Baronet, August 15, 1771-September 21, 1832, a native of Edinburgh, was a younger son of Walter Scott, Esq., Writer to the Signet, by Anne, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford, Professor of the Practice of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh.

"My father's grandfather was Walter Scott, well known in Tivoli-dale by the surname of Beardie. He was the second son of Walter Scott, first Laird of Raeburn, who was the third son of Sir William Scott, and the grandson of Walter Scott, commonly called in tradition Auld Watt, of Harden. I am therefore lineally descended from that ancient chieftain whose name I have made to ring in many a ditty, and from his fair dame, the Flower of Yarrow,—no bad genealogy for a border minstrel. . . . I was an uncommonly healthy child, but had nearly died in consequence of my first nurse being ill of a consumption, a circumstance which she chose to conceal, though to do so was murder to both herself and me. She went privately to consult Dr. Black, the celebrated professor of chemistry, who put my father on his guard. The woman was dismissed, and I was consigned to a healthy peasant, who is still alive to boast of her laddie being what she calls a grand gentleman. I showed every sign of health and strength until I was eighteen months old. One night, I have been often told, I showed great reluctance to be caught and put to bed, and, after being chased about the room, was apprehended, and consigned to my dormitory with some difficulty. It was the last time I was to show such personal agility. In the morning I was discovered to be affected with the fever which often accompanies the cutting of large teeth. It held me three days. On the fourth, when they went to bathe me as usual, they discovered that I had lost the power of my right leg."—Aesthetic Fragment, written 1808.

For the advantage of country air, the child was sent to 1204 his paternal grandfather's farm-house of Sandy Knowe, Roxburghshire, and in his fourth year was taken by his aunt, Miss Janet Scott, to Bath: his general health was thus greatly improved, but the lameness of the leg continued through life.

The affectionate solicitude of Miss Janet was not confined to the physical welfare of her little ward:

"Two or three old books which lay in the window-seat [at Sandy Knowe] were explored for my amusement in the tedious winter days. Automata and Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellanies were my favourites, although, at a later period, an odd volume of Josephus's Wars of the Jews divided my partiality.

"My kind and affectionate aunt, Miss Janet Scott, whose memory will ever be dear to me, used to read these works to me with admirable patience, until I could repeat long passages by heart. The ballad of Hardyknute I was early master of, to the great annoyance of almost our only visitor, the worthy clergyman of the parish, Dr. Duncan, who had not patience to have a sober chat interrupted by my shouting forth this ditty. 'Methinks I now see his tall, thin, emaciated figure, his legs cased in clasped gambadoes, and his face of a length that would have rivalled the Knight of La Mancha's, and hear him exclaiming, 'One may as well speak in the mouth of a cannon as where that child is!'"—Aesthetic Fragment.

But the youthful rhapsodist was sometimes favoured with more patient auditors; and to one of these we are indebted for a graphic account of an interview with little Walter when he was about six years and four months old:

"I last night supped in Mr. Walter Scott's. He has the most extraordinary genius of a boy I ever saw. He was reading a poem to his mother when I went in. I made him read on. It was the description of a shipwreck. His passion rose with the storm. He lifted his eyes and hands. 'There's the mast gone,' says he; 'Crash it goes! They will all perish!' After his agitation, he turns to me. 'That is too melancholy,' says he, 'I had better read you something more amusing.' I preferred a little chat, and asked his opinion of Milton and other books he was reading, which he gave me wonderfully. One of his observations was, 'How strange it is that Adam, just new come into the world, should know every thing! That must be the poet's fancy,' says he. But when told he was created perfect by God, he instantly yielded. When taken to bed last night, he told his aunt he liked that lady. 'What lady?' says she. 'Why, Mrs. Cockburn, for I think she is a virtuous,—like myself.' 'Dear Walter,' says aunt Jenny, 'what is a virtuous?' 'Don't ye know? Why, it's one who wishes and will know every thing.' Now, sir, you will think this a very silly story. Pray, what age do you suppose this boy to be? Name it, now, before I tell you. 'Why, twelve or fourteen.' No such thing. He is not quite six years old. He has a lame leg, for which he was a year at Bath, and has acquired the perfect English accent, which he has not lost since he came, and he reads like a Garrick. You will allow this an uncommon exotic."—Mrs. Cockburn to Rev. Dr. Douglas, 1777. Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. ii.

At eight years of age (in 1779) he was placed in the High School of Edinburgh, where he came into contrast—for we cannot say into competition—with some excellent scholars,—among them James Buchan, David Douglas, and James Hope.

"As for myself," he remarks, with his characteristic honesty, "I glanced like a meteor from one end of the class to the other, and commonly disgusted my kind master as much by negligence and frivolity as I occasionally pleased him by flashes of intellect and talent. Among my companions my good nature and a flow of ready imagination rendered me very popular. Boys are uncommonly just in their feelings, and at least equally generous. My lameness, and the efforts which I made to supply that disadvantage by making up in address what I wanted in activity, engaged the latter principle in my favour; and in the winter play-hours, when hard exercise was impossible, my tales used to assemble an admiring audience round Luckie Brown's fireside, and happy was he that could sit next the inexhaustible narrator. . . . I left the High School, therefore, with a great quantity of general information, ill-arranged, indeed, and collected without system, yet deeply impressed upon my mind, readily assorted by my power of connection and memory, and gilded, if I may be permitted to say so, by a vivid and active imagination."—Aesthetic Fragment.

The autobiographer continues with an account of the nature of his studies at the University of Edinburgh, the Latin, Greek, and Logic classes of which he attended in the years 1783 and 1784. Four years later he was a delighted auditor of the Lectures on Ethios of Dugald Stewart; and during this or his previous term at college he acquired a superficial acquaintance with some branches of the mathematics and several heads in civil municipal law, and a more familiar knowledge of the prominent points of history. His reflections on this portion of his life, made in his thirty-seventh year, carry a lesson which will be endorsed by many thoughtful seniors, and, we fear, profited of by but few juniors:

"If it should ever fall to the lot of youth to peruse these pages, let such a reader remember that it is with the deepest regret that I recollect in my manhood the opportunities of learning which I neglected in my youth, that through every part of my literary career I have felt pinched and hampered by my own ignorance, and that I would, at this moment, give half the reputation I have had the good fortune to acquire, if by doing so I could rest the remaining part upon a sound foundation of learning and science."

To his collegiate acquisitions he added in later life what may be called (if we may be allowed to coin a convenient phrase) a free-translation knowledge of German, Spanish, and French, and a vast fund—not always accurate, but ever ready—of British archaeology: a department of learning which no one better knew how to use, and which few have made so attractive to the general reader.

His stock of romantic lore, the beginnings of which, as we have just seen, were accumulated in early youth, was greatly increased towards the close of the year 1784 by a diligent use of the leisure of a sick-room, the tedium of which was enlivened by the contents of a circulating library largely composed of the records of deeds of chivalry,—“the ponderous folios of Cyrus and Cassandra, down to the most approved works of modern times.” To classical scholarship he had no pretensions at any time of life of the “little Latin and less Greek” which he carried from college, the first received but slender additions, and the last, even to the alphabet, gradually faded from a mind in which it never found a congenial soil. In May, 1786, the young dreamer was recalled to the realities of an every-day working world by entering into indentures, with his father, of apprenticeship as a Writer to the Signet, in 1791 he was admitted by the Faculty of Advocates to his first trials, and in 1792 was called to the Bar, in 1799 became Sheriff of Selkirkshire, with a salary of £300, and in March, 1806, was appointed one of the principal Clerks of the Court of Session,—the full endowment of which post (about £1200 a year) he did not receive until the death of Mr. George Home, in 1812. He was made a baronet in 1820, and was elected President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in the same year. So much for the rise and progress of the reputation and employments of the aspiring practitioner of law, but this proverbially “jealous mistress” was by no means allowed the undivided empire with which alone she is declared to be content: in 1796 the advocate had published a book, translations of Bürger's Lenore and Der Wilde Jäger, and in 1797 he had married a wife, Miss Charlotte Margaret Carpenter, a daughter of Jean Charpentier, a royalist of Lyons, who was “taken from the evil to come” at the commencement of the ill-starred Revolution which in its issues deluged Continental Europe in blood and hampered England with debt. Of the merits of the poem the reader can judge for himself, of the charms of the bride we have a pencil-sketch by Mr. Lockhart:

“Without the features of a regular beauty, she was rich in personal attractions ‘a form that was fashioned as light as a fay’s,’ a complexion of the clearest and lightest olive, eyes large, deep-set, and dazzling, of the finest Italian brown, and a profusion of silken tresses, black as the raven’s wing, her address hovering between the reserve of a pretty young Englishwoman who has not mingled largely in general society, and a certain natural archness and gaiety that suited well with the accompaniment of a French accent. A lovelier vision, as all who remember her in the bloom of her days have assured me, could hardly have been imagined, and from that hour the fate of the young poet was fixed.”—Life of Scott, chap. viii.

Two years after his marriage to this “lovely vision,” (i.e. in 1799,) Scott published a translation of Götthe's Goetz of Berlichingen, and shortly afterwards composed a number of ballads,—William and Ellen, The Eve of St. John, Glenfinlas, The Fire King, &c., already sufficiently noticed on a preceding page, (Lewis, Matthew GREGORY, M.P., No. 12; Tales of Wonder, 1801, 2 vols 8vo.)

Reserving a minute and chronological enumeration of Scott's publications for a later portion of this article, we descend at one step to the year 1805, when, by the hearty admiration accorded The Lay of the Last Minstrel, our author was raised to that commanding position in the eye of the literary public which, either as poet or novelist, he maintained with undiminished honours for the next quarter of a century. A collection of his Ballads and Lyrical Pieces, in one volume octavo, followed in 1806; Marjion delighted the world in 1808; The Lady of the Lake, in 1810; the Vision of Don Roderick, in 1811; Robeys and The Bridal of Triermain, in 1813; The Lord of the Isles, in 1814; and Harold the Dauntless, in 1817.

But to retrace our steps: in 1814 there was published anonymously, at Edinburgh, in three volumes, a historical romance, which, from several causes,—its own extraordinary merits, its position as the first-fruits of a new school of fiction, and especially as the first of a long line of illustrious descendants which bear its name,—will always command the respect of the bibliographer as effectually ally as it will entrance the interest of the mere novel-reader to the latest generation.

Whilst the world was still wondering over the authorship, and reperusing again and again the pages, of Waverley, new food for speculation and delight was afforded in 1815 by the publication of Guy Rannering; in the next year “the wonder grew” by the addition of The Antiquary, and Tales of my Landlord, First Series, (The Black Dwarf, and Old Mortality;) in 1818 appeared Rob Roy, and Tales of my Landlord, Second Series, (The Heart of Mid-Lothian;) in 1819, Tales of my Landlord, Third Series, (The Bride of Lammermoor, and A Legend of Montrose;) and Ivanhoe; in 1820, The Visionary, The Monastery, and The Abbot; in 1821, Kenilworth; in 1822, The Pirate, and The Fortunes of Nigel; in 1823, Peveril of the Peak, and Quentin Durward; in 1824, St. Ronan's Well, and Red Gauntlet; in 1825, Tales of the Crusaders, (The Betrothed, and The Talisman;) in 1826—but, alas! we have come to an eventful year in the history of the Great Magician who had thus rapidly enlarged the Republic of Letters by a domain so wide in extent, so charming in scenery, so diversified in population! From the first publication of Waverley, many eyes had been turned towards Walter Scott, and each succeeding novel strengthened the belief that to no other pen than his could they be justly attributed. Indeed, from the date of the publication of Mr. Adolphus's Letters to Richard Heber, (July, 1821, vide p. 32, supra), the little skepticism on the subject which remained was chiefly based on what proved to be an ill-founded confidence in Scott's versatility. The authorship was denied by him,—we refer not now to the equivocations and evasions which at the best were of but doubtful morality,—denied absolutely and “upon honour,” (see Scott's Introduction to Waverley Novels, ed. 1829, Moore's Memoirs, ii. 199, vi. 130; Warren's Miscellanies,—letter to S. Warren, 3d August, 1823, Table-Talk of Samuel Rogers, 1856.) For this inexcusable breach of truth he has, of course, been excused,—for when did the offences of an eminent sinner lack apologists? but every one of such apologists, since the beginning of the world, has only recorded his own condemnation, and utterly failed to relieve the criminal for whom he injudiciously and immorally pleads. Let it once for all be understood by all that there can be no such thing as a justifiable falsehood: from the first lie which stains our annals—that of the Father of Lies in the Garden of Eden—to the lies at this moment passing on to the register of the Recording Angel, all have been evil and only evil. We gladly turn from a theme which our duty as a conscientious biographer forbade us to leave entirely unnoticed,—which our obligations to truth forbade us to notice otherwise. It is the surmise of the author of the Life of Scott (written by Robert Chambers) in Chambers's Biographical Dictionary of Eminent Scotsmen, “that he kept the Waverley secret with such pertinacious closeness” because “unwilling to be considered as an author writing for fortune, which he must have thought something degrading to the baronet of Abbotsford.”

This supposition was pronounced by James Ballantyne, whose testimony on such a point will hardly be questioned, to be “admirably true.” This ambition to be the founder of a family, the chief of a great landed estate, proved, in the end, Scott's ruin. Previously to 1811 he had been in the habit of spending his summers at a villa called Ashestiel, on the banks of the Tweed, near Selkirk. Henceforth he devoted his literary gains—and they were of course enormous—to the transformation of a newly-purchased farm-house, three miles from Melrose, into a Gothic castle, and the enlargement of a territory of one hundred acres to a vast domain. There was much curiosity to behold the marvels which a lavish outlay of capital, guided by architectural taste and agricultural skill, had wrought at Abbotsford; there was much more to see and hear the lord of the manor, whose fame had now gone forth to all parts of the world where the language and letters of Britain were known and esteemed.

“It would hardly, I believe, be too much to affirm,” says Mr. Lockhart, “that Sir Walter Scott entertained under his roof, in the course of the seven or eight brilliant seasons when his prosperity was at its height, as many persons of distinction in rank, in politics, in art, in literature, and in science, as the most princely nobleman of his age ever did in the like space of time. I turned over, since I wrote the preceding sentence, Mr. Lodge's compendium of the British Peerage, and, on summing up the titles which suggested to myself some reminiscence of this kind, I found them nearly as one out of six. I fancy it is not beyond the mark to add, that of the eminent foreigners who visited our island within this period a moiety crossed the Channel mainly in consequence of the interest with which his writings had invested Scotland,—and that the hope of beholding the man under his own roof was the crowning motive with half that moiety. As for countrymen of his own, like him enrolled, in the higher sense of that word, by the display of their intellectual energies, if any one such contemporary can be pointed out as having crossed the Tweed and yet not spent a day at Abbotsford, I shall be surprised.”—Life of Scott, chap. xlix.

Among the most favoured of these guests were several of our own countrymen. One of these, who has recorded in his own charming pages his experience of Abbotsford hospitality, (vide IRVING, WASHINGTON, p. 938,) and two others, have been so kind as to place in our hands some interesting reminiscences of their pilgrimage to the shrine of genius.

“BOSTON, Dec. 11, 1887.

“DEAR SIR:—I had the happiness to make the acquaintance of Walter Scott in the summer of 1818, just before the appearance of The Heart of Mid-Lothian. The authorship of the Waverley Novels had not then been announced. Mr Lockhart states that it was known at this time to none of his family but Mrs. Scott, though it appears from a letter given in the 6th chapter of Mr Lockhart's biography that it had been communicated to a few friends. I had surmised it from the first appearance of Waverley, and on reading the Antiquary I felt confident that they could have proceeded from no other pen but Scott's. I carried him a letter from Mr. Gifford, the celebrated translator of Juvenal, and editor at that time of the Quarterly Review. Feeling the fullest confidence that I was about to visit not only the author of those inimitable poems which from their first appearance had been my great delight, but also the still-concealed author of the wonderful novels, it was with no ordinary emotion that I found myself on the door-step of No 39 Castle Street. It was the first visit I made after arriving in Edinburgh, and that after a long night's drive in the mail-coach. A brass plate on the door bore the words ‘Mr. Walter Scott, Advocate.’ I was shown into the study so well known by the description given of it by Mr Lockhart, whose first acquaintance with the family took place a few weeks before my visit. Scott's appearance, the tall, somewhat gaunt form, dusky-white hair, rather heavy look except when kindling with excitement, plain, farmer-like person, and lameness in one leg, are too familiar to need description. He received me with much kindness, and told me Mr. Gifford had prepared him to expect me. He said the society of Edinburgh differed from that of London, and, as he thought, to the advantage of the former, in having the literary and fashionable circles more mixed together. He spoke with affection of Mr. Irving, who he said had endeared himself to Scotland by his partiality for the Tweed. Alluding to the passage in Rob Roy, (which was then the last of the novels published,) I asked him ‘whether Mr. Irving had got to be so much of a Scotchman as to lift his hat when the great rivers were named.’ I fancied he looked a little conscious when to this question he replied, ‘Yes, the Scotch do name their great rivers with veneration.’ He seemed interested as I described to him my first reading of the Lady of the Lake in 1810, as I was travelling through the woods of New Jersey on a summer-vacation's jaunt. He showed me a sword that had belonged to the Marquis of Montrose and was given to him by James I. It had formerly belonged to Prince Henry, though made for his father. It had a Latin legend, beginning, ‘Jacobe, pacis alumne.’ On taking my leave, he invited me to dine with him that day, and to visit him at Abbotsford.

“I returned to dinner at 5 P.M., when I was made acquainted with the family,—Mrs. Scott, the two sons, Walter and Charles, and two daughters, Sophia and Anne. There were also a lady and gentleman whose names I do not recall. It was an uncommon family party, and I was made to feel myself at once entirely at home. Walter, the oldest son, and apparently a young man of 18 or 19, asked his father's permission to go to the theatre after dinner, which the father withheld. ‘Young America’ will be shocked at such an instance of filial dutifulness and parental authority. When Anne, the second daughter, a black-eyed lassie of fourteen or fifteen, came in, there was no chair vacant near her, and I rose to give her mine. Her father playfully said, ‘Don't mind her; she's a fine buxom lassie, able to take care of herself.’ The conversation round the table was delightful,—unrestrained, merry, without effort. An original portrait of Rob Roy, Jun., about eighteen inches high, was handed round the table. Scott had borrowed it to have it copied. No allusion was made to the novel; but in the course of the conversation Scott said that Helen McGregor had composed a piece of music. The father of the lady present had received a message from Rob Roy, Jun., threatening to burn the house. It was impossible not to consider the interest taken by Scott in this portrait, his familiarity with the tradition of Helen McGregor, and the absence of all allusions to the novel, in any other light but as indications of the yet unavowed authorship. Had not Scott been the author of Rob Roy, it would naturally have formed the principal topic of conversation. All the persons present spoke with the usual Scottish inflection, but used no words peculiar to North Britain, with the exception, perhaps, of ‘ye’ for ‘you,’ and ‘mind’ for ‘remember.’ There were three dogs at table. A large favourite cat came on with the dessert, and after the ladies retired took post on the table near her master, who said that if cats were treated as kindly as dogs they would be as affectionate. Scott was at dinner at the Duke of Wellington's in Paris when some English papers were brought in charging the allies with undue lenity in not having razed Paris. ‘Asses!’ cried the duke: ‘what sort of an army should I have had after it had been reveling on the plunder of Paris!’ He said the duke was humane on principle, but not naturally a man of keen sensibility.

“After tea, Sophia Scott, afterwards Mrs. Lockhart, sang several national ballads with great simplicity and feeling.

“A short time afterwards I spent a few days—some of the happiest in my life—at Abbotsford. I carried down with me the first copy of The Heart of Mid-Lothian which had been seen by the family. At that time there was a pretty common notion that Mr. Thomas Scott, a brother of Sir Walter, and a paymaster (I think) at Quebec, was the author in whole or in part of some at least of the novels. I had lately made a visit at Kinnell House, the residence of Dugald Stewart, and Mrs. Stewart related to me some anecdotes of Thomas Scott which gave countenance to that opinion. She thought there might be some foundation for it. After I had become sufficiently at home at Abbotsford to talk freely on the subject, I said jokingly to Sophia that, after all, America was entitled to the credit of the novels; ‘for,’ said I, ‘people say your uncle Thomas at Quebec writes them.’ She answered, very quickly and warmly, that if people said that they said what was not true. ‘Oh, then,’ said I, ‘the secret is out, and your father is the author.’ Struck with the vehemence and warmth of her manner, she answered, ‘Your inference is a fair one from my exclamation; and I ought in candor to tell you that we all believe that our father is the author, but we do not know it.’ I asked her how it was possible that such an operation should be going on in the house as the composition and correcting the press of so many volumes and the family with whom he lived on such familiar terms not be aware of it. She said things occasionally took place that might awaken suspicion, that if they chose to be inquisitive they might perhaps find out how the case stood; they believed their father wrote the novels, and that he desired it to remain concealed, and they respected his supposed wishes too much to pry into the matter. ‘Besides,’ said she, ‘my father has always written a great deal, and there has been no change in his habits since I have been old enough to notice them.’

“It would swell unduly this already too long letter to attempt even an abstract of my recollections of this most delightful visit. In taking my last long walk with Sir Walter and his most amiable family, the thought that I should probably never see him again, filled me with sadness. On my return to England, in 1841, but one of the family was living. I had received in 1838 in America a letter from Charles Scott, written from Persia, where he was attached to the British legation. But a few years later all were gone. Miss Lockhart, the daughter of Sophia, gentle and beautiful as I had known her mother twenty-four years before, was just coming into society in London in 1842, but she too, with her father, has since passed away.

“The foregoing is, I fear, hardly adapted for publication; but, just as it is, it is at your service.

“I remain, dear sir, very truly yours,

“EDWARD EVERETT.”

The communication which follows, from George Ticknor, LL.D., the distinguished historian of Spanish literature, will be read with lively interest. He presented it to us April 12, 1866, nearly half a century after the occurrence of the events which it records, but from notes made at the time.

“WALTER SCOTT

“During the winter and spring of 1819, I passed some weeks at Edinburgh. Mr. Scott, not yet Sir Walter by a year, and not by eight years recognised as the author of Waverley, though generally believed to be such, was then lord of the ascendant in Scotch society, as he had long been, and as he continued to be until his death. His health, however, at that period was by no means firm. He was suffering from a succession of illnesses which were called spasms in the stomach, or cramp, which prevented him from being much in the world, or, in fact, being much abroad, except when he was in his Court, then in season, or when he was taking his long daily walk, which he always found important. On this account he was more than commonly willing to see his friends, and even strangers, at home, where he enjoyed more than his wonted leisure, or, at least, submitted to it. In this way I saw him not infrequently at ‘Poor No 39,’ as he used to call his house in Castle Street after he left it. I dined with him there very quietly several times.

“He was not quite forty-eight years old, tall and striking in his figure,—full six feet in height, I think,—stout and well made. From the malconformation of one of his feet, he stooped a little,—at least, that seemed to me the reason why he was somewhat prematurely bent;—and his features bore the marks of coming age, which, like his gray hairs, had, I was told, much increased during the two preceding years. His countenance, as everybody knows, was dull when at rest, and even in common conversation. I think it expressed only much good nature, and a remarkable willingness to listen; but his smile was uncommonly sweet and winning, and when he repeated poetry, which he loved to do, there was a transfiguration of his features which seemed to change their expression entirely. His deep, bluish-gray eyes, or rather the white portions of them, blushed and became pink with his emotion,—an effect I have noticed in only a few other instances, and those in persons who possessed much sensibility.

“His poetical talent was developed later than usual. He wrote, indeed, school-boy verses, but with difficulty; and Clerk, the eminent advocate, (not William, his particular friend,) said once that when Scott was about twenty years old, and they were going over to Fife one day in a boat, they happened to need a few rhymes, and, after several efforts, both gave up in despair,—Scott saying, "Well, John, it is clear you and I were never made for poets." To his early story-telling propensities, however, Clerk bore ample testimony. They had both been at the High School together, and though Scott did not much distinguish himself in his Greek and mathematics, yet as soon as they came out into the 'yards' the boys used to gather round him, near a portion of the wall where Scott liked to sit, and beg him to tell them a story. His resources seemed inexhaustible, his own imagination supplied a large part of them. Sometimes his audience consisted of twenty or thirty.

"Of his extraordinary memory I had many proofs; but there was one which surprised me more than the rest. I was then fresh from Spain, and Mr. Scott was curious about whatever related to that remarkable country, its people and literature, and especially about whatever related to its early poetry. One day, after dinner, when the conversation, under his leading, had been upon these subjects, he repeated to me English translations of two long Spanish ballads. They were unusually well done, and I naturally asked him where I could find them. He replied that they had never been printed. This made me suspect that they were his own, and led me to some further inquiries about them, intending, if I could properly do so, to get a copy of them. He perceived my drift, and, laughing heartily, said, 'No,—I have no copy of them. Indeed, I never saw a copy.' Of course my curiosity was still further excited, and at last he told me that they were translations by Hookham Frere, who had read them to him; 'but,' he added, 'they were so fine that I made him read them to me twice.' Frere, it will be remembered, had an extraordinary power in this way, and a great love for early poetry. Mackintosh calls him the first of English translators. In consequence of this conversation about the old Spanish ballads, I sent Mr. Scott a note containing some facts about the Romanceros, &c., to which I received the following answer:

"DEAR SIR—

"I have to return you my very best thanks for your most valuable information respecting the Spanish Romanceros. I fear I shall never be able to labour much more in this vineyard, but I am delighted to see the task which I once pursued enthusiastically taken up by such intelligent and able successors.

"I am at present in such ticklish health from a tendency to stomach affections, that I can only see very small parties of my friends. But if I can tempt you to a quiet dinner on to-morrow, or any day before the 10th, excepting only the 6th, I will promise you a highland pibroch, a pair of ptarmigans, and a hearty welcome.

Yours, truly obliged,

"WALTER SCOTT"

"The dinner, with its piper, it is needless to say, was agreeable. Nobody was added to the family, I think, but Mr. Thomas Thomson, the well-known antiquary, and one other person.

"On another occasion Mr. Scott invited me to dine with him, and accompany him and his family to the theatre and see a play called Rob Roy. It was not, as Lockhart suggests, the first representation. On the contrary, it had already been acted many times, with great success, and Mr. Scott's family, or at least some of them, had seen it, but he had been too unwell. Mackay, who died only eight or ten years ago, and who was long known as a remarkable actor, was then beginning to be famous, and performed the part of Bailie Nicol Jarvie, as both Lockhart and Scott himself have noticed, with unmitigated felicity, at this period, a great number of times in Edinburgh, as he afterwards did still oftener in London. The box which Mr. Scott had taken was not far from the stage, so that it could be seen by most of the house, and his presence was evidently noticed and his features watched by many of the audience, especially those in the pit near us. He protected himself a little from their attention, at first, by placing himself behind a small pillar, but, as the piece advanced, he became so much interested that he leaned forward eagerly, and became very noticeable. Two or three times he objected to the details of Mackay's acting, but, upon the whole, he enjoyed it prodigiously, and, when it was over, said to me, 'That's fine, sir—that's very fine,' adding, with the peculiar Scotch look which he sometimes wore,—half sly, wholly humorous,—and all I wish is that Jedediah Cleishbotham could be here to enjoy it.' He evidently did not intend I should doubt who wrote the novels.

"One day, as I was walking up and down in that Babel, the great hall of the Parliament House, a sort of fashionable exchange at that time, where four courts were transacting business on the sides of the immense room, amidst a confusion which seemed to make it perfectly absurd to attempt any thing like legal discussion, a person accosted me who was so disguised by his wig and gown that I had no suspicion who it was until I recognized his voice. It was Mr. Scott. The Court of which he was clerk had just adjourned, and he proposed to me to take a walk with him, such as I think he was in the habit of taking before dinner every day. He carried me round chiefly in the old town, and showed me many curious parts of it. What most interested me were the houses where Hume, Blair, Ferguson, Smith, and Robertson had lived, and the anecdotes he told me of them and their times, bringing out a story for every lane and close we passed. He seemed to have a great admiration for the period to which he referred; and, remembering what had been said about it in Guy Rannering, not then acknowledged to be his, I pressed the conversation in that direction. He did not hesitate to avow the same opinions, and sometimes, it seemed to me, in much the same language, with Pleydell. He even went further, and said he thought we were living in the decline of Edinburgh society. Perhaps he was right; but certainly I did not feel disposed to acknowledge it at that moment.

"He was very proud of his oldest daughter, Sophia, afterwards Mrs. Lockhart, who was then about twenty years old. She was not handsome, nor in any way brilliant, but she was natural, simple, full of Scotch feeling, and though not without outbreaks of enthusiasm, yet remarkable for a sort of easy tact, which was, I think, very much to her father's taste. She played on the harp, perhaps not very well, and she sang, without having a voice of great compass or power; but she confined herself, so far as I heard her, almost entirely to the national music and the old ballads, and in these was as successful as a Sibyl, with not a little of a Sibyl's air and character. It was like improvisation, so spontaneous did it seem.

"Once, as she was playing, she was a little embarrassed. Lady Hume asked her to play an old ballad of Rob Roy. Several persons were present, and she was disturbed by the recollection of the way in which her father's name had been associated with the adventures of this extraordinary Highlander. But (as, I suspect, on all occasions) she took the most direct means to settle her difficulty. She ran across the room to her father, and whispered to him. 'Yes, my dear,' he replied, loud enough to be heard by those near him, 'play it, if you are asked, and Waverley, and the Antiquary, too, if there are any such ballads.'

"As the spring came on, there was a vacation in the Court of which Mr. Scott was clerk, and he went, as I think was his custom, to Abbotsford, taking only his daughters with him, and leaving the sons in town for their schools with Mrs. Scott. He was good enough to ask me to visit him there, and invited my friend Mr. Cogswell to go at the same time, in a way which much gratified me. A few days afterwards, I received the following note from him, accompanied by a copy of the Roxburgh Catalogue, which he had promised me, and a copy of 'Kirk's Secret Commonwealth,' a curious tract, of about a hundred quarto pages, on Fairy Superstitions and Second Sight, originally published in 1601, and of which, in 1815, Mr. Scott had caused a hundred copies to be privately printed by the Ballantynes, with additions,—a circumstance, I think, not noted by Lockhart:

"MY DEAR SIR—

"Accept a copy of the Roxburgh Catalogue, to which I take the liberty to add a rare tract which I published a small impression of some time ago, and which I believe is already R.R. I hope you have not forgotten the proposed visit on Tweedside.

"Yrs. truly,

"W. SCOTT"

"We left Edinburgh soon afterwards, (March 15,) in beautiful weather, with the spring well advanced, and every thing beginning to be green. We stopped the first night at Kelso, and then, not forgetting the Duke of Roxburgh's seat of Flores, or Thomson's birthplace at Ednam, or Dryburgh Abbey, where Scott himself has since been buried, we drove along the gentle, graceful banks of the Tweed, by Melrose, to Abbotsford. As we approached it, the postillion, who knew where we were going, pointed it out to us, with great glee, as 'the Sherries,' because Mr. Scott was then Sheriff of the county of Selkirk, and, like his other neighbors, the postillion was proud of him and of his official position to them. It was not far from the road; and a very odd-looking establishment it was,—neither cottage nor house, neither ancient nor modern, nor an imitation of any thing like either, but a complete nondescript, begun upon the foundation of a cottage, and growing gradually up by successive additions to become nobody could tell what. The situation was not very good, for it was under a hill, and with very little prospect on either side, but it was within sound of the Tweed's ripple, which Scott always so loved, and opposite the entrance of the Gala, on whose banks he had lived so happily soon after he was married. But, whatever its arrangements might be, they suited him, and always continued to do so. But when, eighteen years afterwards, I reached the top of the same hill, coming again from Melrose, and looked down upon the strange castellated mansion which Abbotsford had become, I saw at a glance, though not without a sharp pang, what its master had sacrificed to found the 'Scotts of Abbotsford,' and how that ill-contrived structure had brought his gray hairs in sorrow to the grave.

"We were most hospitably received. Nobody was in the house except the family and Mr. Skene, an intimate friend, to whom Mr. Scott had dedicated one of the cantos of Marmion,—a cultivated, pleasant person. Mr. Scott was more amusing in the country than he had been in town. He seemed, like Anteus, to touch his kindred earth, and to quicken with its influences. The Border country was no doubt the natural home of his talent, and it was in walking with him over his own hills and by the side of his own Tweed—in the visits he liked to make with strangers to 'the bonnet-lairds,' or small proprietors, of his neighborhood—that he was obviously all that his works might lead one to wish him to be. I have no doubt that his conversation in such walks, or after dinner or supper, was equal in interest to the same amount of reading in one of his novels. It was very different, but it was as good, and as full of his peculiar talent.

"The house, as it then stood, was a kind of collection of fragments of history. There were, in one part of it, architectural ornaments copied with care from the ruins of Melrose; in another, the identical gate of the Tolbooth, or rather the stone part of it, through which the Porteous mob forced its way; an old fountain was before the house, old bits of stone-work and masonry in other places, and everywhere old inscriptions and old armor, which seemed to make it a kind of singular poetical habitation, such as ought to belong to him. I liked it much better than I did when it was turned into a castle, or, rather, attempted to be.

"Nobody came to Abbotsford while we stayed there,—a circumstance which added much to the pleasure of the visit. The breakfast-hour was nine; and when we met, it was understood that Mr. Scott had been up a good many hours and had done a good deal of work. At any rate, the Third Series of the 'Tales of my Landlord' appeared two or three months afterwards, and, I have no doubt, every morning while we were at Abbotsford progress was made in the 'Legend of Montrose.' But after breakfast, which was a hearty Scotch one, and which Mr. Scott much enjoyed, he seemed to be at leisure. A long walk was evidently the custom of the house; and we all went together.

As we walked on, he seemed to have a story for every stone on his estate; and for the great points in the prospect—like "the Beldon that were cleft in twain"—he had a plenty of traditions, or a snatch of an old ballad, which he gave with great satisfaction and an appropriate commentary.

"One day, as we were going through a large field, where there were several horses straying about, Maids, who, with two or three other dogs of lower degree, belonged to the party, placed himself on a little knoll, in a peculiarly picturesque position. As I noticed it, Mr. Scott asked me why I supposed Maids had placed himself there? I had no conjecture to make. Mr. Scott explained that it was a sort of commanding position, where the magnificent dog could, if needful, protect us from the horses or prevent them from straying too near to us. 'He is as good as a man,' I said. 'You may say as good as a gentleman,' Mr. Scott replied, 'and no injustice done to the quality.'

"When we returned from the morning walk, we went to our rooms. Perhaps more work was done on the 'Legend of Montrose'; perhaps not. I had no knowledge or suspicion of what might be going on. No reference was made to the novels while I was at Abbotsford, except that when something was said about Mr. Thomas Scott, a brother of Sir Walter, then in Canada as paymaster of a regiment, Sophia added, with a little archness, 'Some people have thought Uncle Tom wrote the Waverley Novels; but that is absurd.' 'Uncle Tom,' however, as we now know from Lockhart, was thought by his brother to be equal to writing them, or something as good, and was asked by Mr. Scott 'to look knowing when Waverley is spoken of,' after he was aware that 'Uncle Tom' had been suggested as its author.

"Dinner was at half-past four. As soon as we were seated, a pibroch was struck up before the windows by the piper, one of the best-looking and most vain, self-sufficient dogs I ever saw, who walked up and down, dressed in full Highland costume, and played on his pipes, until the dessert arrived, making such a distressing noise that conversation was not easy. But with the dessert he was called in, saluted his laird, and received a glass of whiskey, as his compliment and dismissal. Conversation then set in earnest. We lingered long at table, for Mr. Scott enjoyed it, and his talk was as good as a given number of pages in one of his novels would have been. Coffee followed, and a little run in some young plantations near the house, which were not much to look at, but upon which it was evident that Mr. Scott valued himself not a little. When we came in, the piper was heard again in a large room which had just then been finished, but was not yet furnished, and we all went there, and those of us who liked it danced Scotch reels until we were tired. Tea and conversation afterwards brought us to ten o'clock, and a moderate, hot supper, with whiskey punch, which Scott valued himself upon brewing with more than common skill, and then a very short and very gay hour at the table or by the fireside sent us to bed. He generally talked of what related to Scotland, but once, I remember, he went fully and with great spirit into the plays of Massinger, whom he characterized as 'the most gentleman-like of all the old English dramatists.' He had just been reading him in Gifford's edition, upon whose notes he placed a high value.

"There was great frankness in the whole family, and in the way they talked about one another. Mr. Scott said his great object with his children had been not to over-educate them, but to follow the natural indications of their characters rather than attempt to mould them. Charles, he thought, would make a 'writer to the signet,' or a lawyer. He was then only eleven years old, and had been permitted a few days before to come from Edinburgh alone on a pony, a distance, I think, of about eight-and-twenty miles. 'And what do you think,' said Mr. Scott, 'pleased him best about it?' I supposed it was the independence of the position. 'No,' said Mr. Scott, 'it was just paying the tolls and taking care that he got the right change.' But Mr. Scott was disappointed in Charles. He died in a clerkship in the Foreign Office in London. Of Walter, then eighteen, he judged more accurately. He said that he did not foresee intellectual success for him, 'and so,' said he, 'I have given him as much Latin as is good for him, and taught him to ride well, and shoot well, and tell the truth, and I think he will make a good soldier, and serve his country well, instead of a poor scholar or advocate, doing no good to himself or anybody else.' Sophia, however, did not seem to be satisfied with her father's system of education in some respects; and, when he was gone out of the room, said, with her little Scotch idiom, 'He's always just telling us of our faults, but never taking such serious pains to have us mend. I think sometimes that he would like to have us differ from other boys and girls, though it should be by having us worse.'

"Our pleasant visit was sadly ended on the third day. Late in the evening, Mr. Scott was seized with a violent spasm in his stomach. A surgeon was sent for immediately, who continued with him all night, vainly endeavoring to give him relief by laudanum and bleeding. We sat up, as did Mr. Skene, until near morning, and then, after breakfast, left abruptly, a day earlier than we had intended.

"At Oxford I found a letter from Mr. Skene, telling me that Mr. Scott was again better; but that the attack had been very severe, and had filled the family for a time with the cruellest apprehensions. I never saw him afterwards; but the letter from Mr. Skene was as follows:

"EDINB., 23 March, 1810.

"DEAR SIR:—

"I hoped sooner to have been able to fulfil my promise of informing you of the recovery of our friend Mr. Scott, who felt much gratified when I informed him of the very kind interest you took in his welfare. I remained with him until last night, when he had so far recovered as to quit his room during part of the day, and even to show somewhat of his almost invincible cheerfulness; though I cannot flatter myself that the disease is subdued even for the present. He apprehends a return, and, I fear, with too much reason. He was tolerably easy the night after you left Abbotsford, but on the succeeding night was very sharply visited by a return of spasms, accompanied with considerable inflammation, which occasioned a rapid extension of the pain over his breast, and was only arrested by bleeding. His physician from Edinburgh, having heard of his attack, came to Abbotsford immediately, and, I am happy to say, perfectly approved of every thing that had been done. The country surgeon received his instructions, and now remains almost constantly with Mr. Scott. I am sorry not to have a more favorable report to make; though I cannot but flatter myself that his naturally vigorous constitution will ultimately shake him free of the disease.

"He desires to express his regret at the unpleasant interruption occasioned to your visit, which deprived him of the enjoyment he had anticipated in your company; and, although you meditate a very distant separation, he trusts the chances of life may again give him the satisfaction of meeting with you. I beg to be permitted to express a similar wish on my part, and to subscribe myself, with much esteem,

"Yours respectfully,

"JAMES SKENE.

"126 Princes Street."

Thus far Mr. Ticknor,—concerning whom Scott writes to Southey as follows:

"ABBOTSFORD, 4th April, 1810.

"I shall like our American acquaintance the better that he has sharpened your remembrance of me; but he is also a wondrous fellow for romantic lore and antiquarian research, considering his country. . . I had written thus far last week, when I was interrupted, first by the arrival of our friend Ticknor, with Mr. Cogswell, [p. 401, supra,] another well-accomplished Yankee," &c.—Lockhart's Scott, chap. xlv.

In his Autobiographical Recollections, 1860, chapter iv., C. R. Leslie gives us an interesting account of a visit paid to Abbotsford "in the autumn of 1824, for the purpose of painting a portrait of Sir Walter Scott for Mr. Ticknor, of Boston." Leslie's pen-and-ink portrait of Scott will be found on a later page of our sketch.

But the "brilliant seasons," as Mr. Lockhart well calls them, at Abbotsford, were to be followed by the dark days of adversity.

In the winter of 1825-26 a commercial crisis prostrated many houses, and among these were Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., who carried on two establishments, one for printing and the other for publishing, and Messrs. Ballantyne & Co. To the astonishment of everybody not in the secrets of these concerns, it was ascertained that Scott was a partner of the last, and also in this capacity a large debtor to the creditors of the first, of these firms. It would appear that the embarrassments of Hurst & Robinson, another publishing house, precipitated the catastrophe which overwhelmed the three establishments in a common ruin. This mercantile connection had been, as his Diary, subsequently published, gives melancholy evidence, a source of painful anxiety to Scott. His partnership with James Ballantyne in the printing-business commenced in May, 1805, with John Ballantyne & Co., publishers, in May, 1808. To say the least, Constable and the Ballantynes had managed recklessly, and Scott had lavished foolishly. No biographer can do justice to this portion of Scott's history: fortunately, he has traced the sad annals in indelible lines in his only confidant,—the Diary of 1826; and from that record we shall borrow a few leaves:

"January 5.—Got the desired accommodation, which will put J. B. quite straight, but am a little anxious still about Constable. He has immense stock, to be sure, and most valuable, but he may have sacrifices to make to convert a large proportion of it into ready money. The accounts from London are most disastrous. Many wealthy persons totally ruined."

"January 14.—An odd, mysterious letter from Constable, who has gone post to London. It strikes me to be that sort of letter which I have seen men write when they are desirous that their disagreeable intelligence should be rather apprehended than expressed. . . Luckily, the funny people are gone, and I shall not have the task of grinning when I feel serious enough. A letter from J. B. mentioning Constable's journey, but without expressing much apprehension. He knows C. well, and saw him before his departure, and makes no doubt of his being able easily to extricate whatever may be entangled. I will not, therefore, make myself uneasy. I can help doing so, surely, if I will. . . I see no reason why one should not, with God's assistance, shun noxious thoughts, which foretell evil and cannot remedy it."

As Constable's plan of "extrication" was the negotiation of a loan from the Bank of England to the moderate amount of "£100,000 to £200,000 on the security of the copyrights in his possession," it is no great marvel that "J. B.'s" confidence in his financial abilities was not justified by the result: Constable kept his "copyrights," and the Bank of England kept its money. The catastrophe could no longer be averted:

"Edinburgh, January 18.—Came through cold roads to as cold news. Hurst and Robinson have suffered a bill to come back upon Constable, which I suppose infers the ruin of both houses. We shall soon see. Dined with the Skenes."

"January 17.—James Ballantyne this morning, good, honest fellow, with a visage as black as the crock. He hopes no salvation, has indeed taken measures to stop. It is hard, after having fought such a battle. . . . My old acquaintance, Miss Elizabeth Clerk, sister of Willie, died suddenly. I cannot choose but wish it had been Sir W. B.; and yet the feeling is unmanly. I have Annie, my wife, and Charles to look after. I felt rather sneaking as I came home from the Parliament House,—felt as if I were liable monstrum digno in no very pleasant way. But this must be borne cum ceteris; and, thank God, however uncomfortable, I do not feel despondent. . . . My wife and daughter are gloomy, yet not patient."

"January 18.—He that sleeps too long in the morning, let him borrow the pillow of a debtor. So says the Spaniard, and so say I. I had, of course, an indifferent night of it. I wish these two days were over, but the worst is over."

It will be observed that Sir Walter fulfilled his engagement to dine at Skene's on the 16th of January, although the news of the dreaded catastrophe had just reached him. Lockhart remarks,

"Mr. Skene assures me that he appeared that evening quite in his usual spirits, conversing on whatever topic was started as easily and gaily as if there had been no impending calamity; but at parting he whispered, 'Skene, I have something to speak to you about. Be so good as to look in on me as you go to the Parliament House to-morrow.' When Skene called in Castle Street, about half-past nine o'clock, next morning, he found Scott writing in his study. He rose, and said, 'My friend, give me a shake of your hand—mine is that of a beggar.' He then told me that Ballantyne had just been with him, and that his ruin was certain and complete, explaining briefly the nature of his connection with the three houses whose downfall must that morning be made public. He added, 'Don't fancy I am going to stay at home to brood idly on what can't be helped. I was at work on Woodstock when you came in, and I shall take up the pen the moment I get back from court. I mean to dine with you again on Sunday, and hope then to report progress to some purpose.' When Sunday came, he reported, accordingly, that in spite of all the numberless interruptions of meetings and conferences with his partner, the Constables, and men of business—to say nothing of his distressing anxieties on account of his wife and daughter—he had written a chapter of his novel every intervening day."

"Distressing anxieties about his wife and daughter."—alas! it was here that the "iron entered into his soul." It was this that bowed the strong man,—resolute, and even cheerful, under his own share of this great sorrow.

"January 19.—A painful scene after dinner, and another after supper, endeavouring to convince those poor dear creatures that they must not look for miracles, but consider the misfortune as certain, and only to be lessened by patience and labour."

"January 21.—Susannah, in Tristram Shandy, thinks death is best not in bed. I am sure trouble and vexation are not. The watches of the night pass wearily when disturbed by fruitless regrets and disagreeable anticipations. Mr. Gibson with a most melancholy tale. Things are much worse with Constable than I apprehended. Naked we entered the world, and naked we leave it—blessed be the name of the Lord!"

"January 22.—I feel neither dishonoured nor broken down by the bad—now really bad—news I have received. I have walked my last on the domain I have planted—sate the last time in the halls I have built. But death would have taken them from me, if misfortune had spared them. My poor people, whom I loved so well! . . . But I find my eyes moistening, and that will not do. I will not yield without a fight for it. . . . Poor Mr. Pole, the harper, sent to offer me £500 or £600, whichever he all. There is much good in the world, after all!"

"Mr. Pole," comments Lockhart, "had long attended Sir Walter's daughters as teacher of the harp. To the end Scott always spoke of his conduct on this occasion as the most affecting circumstance that accompanied his disasters."

And this, although an anonymous correspondent tendered him £30,000 down! Dalgleish, Sir Walter's butler, also gave a touching proof of his attachment to his master: he said he "cared not how much his wages were reduced, but go he would not!"

Sir James Mackintosh writes to Scott, (Feb. 7, 1826.)

"No man living has given pleasure to so many persons as you have done, and you must be assured that great multitudes who never saw you, in every quarter of the world, will regret the slightest disturbance of your convenience."

"The universal feeling," remarks Lockhart, "was, I believe, much what the late amiable and accomplished Earl of Dudley expressed to Mr. Morritt when these news reached them at Brighton. 'Scott ruined!' said he 'the author of Waverley ruined! Good God! let every man to whom he has given months of delight give him a shilling, and he will rise to-morrow morning richer than Rothschild!'"

We continue our extracts from the Diary:

"January 22.—I am glad that beyond my own family, who are, excepting Lady B., young and able to bear sorrow, of which this is the first taste to some of them, most of the hearts are past aching which would have once been inconsolable on this occasion. I do not mean that many will not seriously regret, and some perhaps lament, my misfortunes. But my dear mother, my almost sister, Christy Rutherford, poor Will Erskine,—these would have been mourners indeed! Well—exertion—exertion! O, invention, rouse thyself! May man be kind! may God be propitious!"

"January 23.—Slept ill, not having been abroad these eight days—splendida dies. Then a dead sleep in the morning, and, when the awakening comes, a strong feeling how well I could dispense with it at once and forever. This passes away, however, as better and more dutiful thoughts arise in my mind."

"January 24.—I went to the Court for the first time to-day, and, like the man with the large nose, thought everybody was thinking of me and my mishaps. Many were, undoubtedly; and all rather regrettingly, some obviously affected. It is singular to see the difference of men's manners whilst they strive to be kind or civil in their way of addressing me. Some smiled as they wished me good-day; as if to say, 'Think nothing about it, my lad; it is quite out of our thoughts.' Others greeted me with the affected gravity which one sees and despises at a funeral. The best—bad—all, I believe, meaning equally well—just shook hands, and went on."

Of this memorable interview with his old friends we have also a record by one of their number, published in 1856. Lord Cockburn remarks,

"Well do I remember his first appearance after this calamity was divulged, when he walked into Court one day in January, 1826. There was no affectation, and no reality of facing it, no look of indifference or defiance, but the manly and modest air of a gentleman conscious of some folly, but of perfect rectitude and of most heroic and honourable resolutions. He had not even then a political enemy. There was not one of those whom his thoughtlessness had so sorely provoked, who would not have given every spare farthing he possessed to relieve Sir Walter."—Memorials of his Time, chap. vii.

On the eighteenth day after the catastrophe, Scott records in his Diary:

"February 3.—This is the first time since my trouble that I felt at awaking."

"I had drunken deep"

Of all the blessedness of sleep."

"I made not the slightest pause, nor dreamed a single dream, nor even changed my side. This is a blessing to be grateful for."

But, alas! other clouds were again "lowering o'er his house," and a few weeks later we find him recording:

"March 12.—Lady S., the faithful and true companion of my fortunes, good and bad, for so many years, has, but with difficulty, been prevailed on to see Dr. Abercrombie, and his opinion is far from favourable. . . . yet her constitution is so good, that, if she will be guided by advice, things may be yet ameliorated. God grant it! for really these misfortunes come too close upon each other."

The late opulent lord of Abbotsford and its lofty pile now "takes lodgings" at Edinburgh, and thus he soliloquizes:

"Edinburgh, Mrs. Brown's Lodgings, North St. David Street, May 12.—I passed a pleasant day with kind J. B., which was a great relief from the black dog which would have worried me at home. He was quite alone."

"Well, here I am in Arden. And I may say, with Touchstone, 'When I was at home I was in a better place' [As you like it, Act I, Scene IV]. . . . Only one other lodger in the house, a Mr. Shandy,—a clergyman,—and, despite his name, said to be a quiet one."

"May 14.—A fair good-morrow to you, Mr. Sun, who are shining so brightly on these dull walls. Methinks you look as if you were looking as bright on the banks of the Tweed, but look where you will, Sir Sun, you look upon sorrow and suffering."

"May 15.—Received the melancholy intelligence that all is over at Abbotsford."

"Abbotsford, May 16.—She died at nine in the morning, after being very ill for two days—easy at last. I arrived here late last night. Anne is worn out, and has had hysterics, which returned on my arrival. Her broken accents were like those of a child, the language as well as the tones broken, but in the most gentle voice of submission. 'Poor mamma—never return again—gone forever—a better place.' When I contrast what this place now is with what it has been not long since, I think my heart will break. Lonely, aged, deprived of my family—all but poor Anne, an impoverished, an embarrassed man, deprived of the sharer of my thoughts and counsels, who could always talk down my sense of the calamitous apprehensions which break the heart that must bear them alone! . . . I have seen her! The figure I beheld is and is not my Charlotte, my thirty years' companion! If I write long in this way, I shall write down my resolution, which I should rather write up, if I could. I wonder how I shall do with the large portion of thoughts which were hers for thirty years. I suspect they will be hers yet for a long time at least."

"May 18.—She is sentient and conscious of my emotions somewhere—somehow, where we cannot tell, how we cannot tell; yet would I not at this moment renounce the mysterious yet certain hope that I shall see her in a better world, for all that this world can give me. They are arranging the chamber of death; that which was long the apartment of conjugal happiness, and of whose arrangements (better than in richer houses) she was so proud. They are treading fast and thick. For weeks you could have heard a footfall. Oh, my God!"

"Edinburgh, May 20.—Returned to town last night with Charles. This morning resume ordinary habits of rising early, working in the morning, and attending the Court. All will come easily round. But it is at first as if men looked strange on me, and bite their lip when they wring my hand and indicate suppressed feelings. . . . Their sympathy intrudes on my private affliction. This has been a melancholy day—most melancholy. I am afraid poor Charles found me weeping. . . . I ask if my poor Charlotte can actually be dead. I think I feel my loss more than at the first blow."

"September 12.—As I slept for a few minutes in my chair, to which I am more addicted than I should wish, I heard, as I thought, my poor wife call me by the familiar name of fondness which she gave me. My recollections on waking were melancholy enough."

On the last day of the ensuing year (1827) Scott gratefully enumerates the many evidences of the Divine goodness and mercy which claimed his devout gratitude,—thus concluding:

"For all these great blessings it becomes me well to be thankful to God, who, in his good time and good pleasure, sends us good as well as evil."

On the presentation of "a state of affairs" after the bankruptcies of January 16, 1826, it appeared that Scott was indebted to Constable & Co.'s creditors, as a partner of Ballantyne & Co., for nearly £72,000, and that the whole amount of Ballantyne & Co.'s debts was £110,000, for the whole of which Scott was liable. About half of the £72,000 due to Constable & Co. being included in the debts of Ballantyne & Co., Scott's total business liabilities were about £147,000, (say $650,000.)

"He thought that, by devoting the rest of his life to the service of his creditors, he could in the upshot pay the last farthing he owed them. They (with one or two paltry exceptions) applauded his honourable intentions and resolutions, and partook to a large extent in the reluctance of their debtor. Nor had they miscalculated as to their interest. He paid the penalty of health and life, but he saved his honour and his self-respect."

"The glory dies not, and the grief is past."

LOCKHART: Life of Scott, chap. lxxviii

Woodstock was completed March 26, 1826, (the 69th day after the bankruptcy,) and on the 3d of April the author makes the pleasing record,

"I have the extraordinary and gratifying news that Woodstock is sold for £8226, all ready money,—a matchless sale for less than three months' work. If Napoleon does as well, or near it, it will put the trust affairs in high flourish. Four or five years of leisure and industry would, with such success, amply replace my losses."

But "Napoleon"—commenced in June, 1825, really written in about twelve months, and published in June, 1827—not only did "as well," but much better:

"The Napoleon (first and second editions) produced for the creditors a sum which it even now startles me to mention,—£18,000. As by the time the historical work was published nearly half of the First Series of Chronicles of the Canongate had been written, it is obvious that the amount to which Scott's literary industry, from the close of 1825 to the 10th of June, 1827, had diminished his debt, cannot be stated at less than £28,000. Had health been spared him, how soon must he have freed himself from all his encumbrances!"—LOCKHART Life of Scott, chap. lxxlii.

Let us continue this pleasing theme: a particular account of the products of this teeming brain during the last five years of its marvellous activity can be postponed to a future page.

At a meeting of trustees and creditors held December 17, 1830, there was

"then announced another dividend on the Ballantyne estate of three shillings in the pound,—thus reducing the original amount of the debt to about £54,000. . . The meeting was numerous, and, not contented with a renewed vote of thanks to their debtor, they passed unanimously the following resolution . . . 'That Sir Walter Scott be requested to accept of his furniture, plate, linens, paintings, library, and curiosities of every description, as the best means the creditors have of expressing their very high sense of his most honourable conduct, and in grateful acknowledgment for the unparalleled and most successful exertions he has made and continues to make for them.'"

To run ahead of our story a little: at the time of Sir Walter's death, twenty months after the preceding date, there remained due the £54,000 just referred to: which was settled, shortly after his death, by £22,000 which had been insured on his life, £2000 in the hands of the trustees, and £30,000 advanced by Cadell on the security of the profits accruing from Sir Walter's copyright property and literary remains. Mr. Cadell proved a good manager. Before 1850, by the issue of various editions skilfully adapted to all classes of buyers of Scott's writings, his £30,000 had been reimbursed, and a handsome sum in addition been carried to the credit side of profit and loss, "for the benefit of all whom it might concern." See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1849, i. 323; Lon. Athen., 1851, 200.

Scott's Works are now pub. by the eminent house of Adam & Charles Black, of Edinburgh; and of their beautiful editions we shall have something to say hereafter.

Thus had prodigies been achieved by the unquenchable zeal, the indomitable energy, the persevering effort of this noble-hearted man. But the "Great Magician," after all, was mortal; and no mortal mind could long sustain itself under such pressure. He who desires to linger over the sad story of the gradual decay of such an intellect—grand even in its ruins—must seek elsewhere than these pages. We have had enough of sorrow; and we hasten to the "closing scene." In November, 1830, Scott retired from his office of Principal Clerk in the Court of Sessions, with an allowance of £800 per annum in lieu of the full salary of £1300. The Government offered to supply the deficiency by a pension; but this distasteful gratuity Scott's creditors permitted him to decline. During the next summer, Castle Dangerous and Count Robert of Paris were concluded; and he now consented to follow the advice of his physicians, and spent a winter abroad, in "complete abstinence from all literary labour."

"He is now," thus he addresses the reader in the conclusion of the volumes just named, "on the eve of visiting foreign parts; a ship of war is commissioned by its Royal Master to carry the author of Waverley to climates in which he may possibly attain such a restoration of health as may serve him to spin his thread to an end in his own country. . . The public have claims on his gratitude for which the author of Waverley has no means of expression, but he may be permitted to hope that the powers of his mind, such as they are, may not have a different date from those of his body, and that he may again meet his patronising friends, if not exactly in his old fashion of literature, at least in some branch which may not call forth the remark that

"Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage."

He went forth from his halls with the prayers and benedictions of all classes—the hearty valedictory of the honest rustic and the genius of Wordsworth were alike eloquent in supplications for the one whom so many hearts would follow o'er the deep.

The tribute of Wordsworth was worthy alike of the poet and of his illustrious theme:

"A trouble, not of clouds or weeping rain
Nor of the setting sun's pathetic light
Engendered, hangs o'er Eldon's triple height:
Spirits of power assembled there complain
For kindred power departing from their sight;
While Tweed, best pleased in chanting a blithe strain
Saddens his voice again, and yet again
Lift up your hearts, ye mourners! for the might
Of the whole world's good wishes with him goes!
Blessings and prayers, in nobler return
Than sceptred King or laurelled Conqueror knows,
Follow this wondrous potentate. Be true,
Ye winds of ocean, and thou midland sea,
Wafting your charge to soft Parthenope!"

It was on the morning of the 23d of September that, attended by his daughter Anne and his son-in-law Lockhart, Sir Walter left Abbotsford. At London, Lockhart tells us, "the invalid seemed to enjoy having one or two friends to meet him at dinner," and amongst these he notices "Sir David Wilkie, Thomas Moore, Mr. Milman, and Mr. Washington Irving." Now, if the reader will turn to our article on Washington Irving in the present work, he will notice (p. 938) that we have made a half-promise to give him Irving's own account of the meeting with Scott to which Lockhart refers.

Since those lines were written, Irving has followed his friend to "the house appointed for all living," but of our conversations with the lamented dead on this and other themes we have preserved a record, and that portion which refers to the last interview with Scott, the reader, we are confident, will be glad to peruse.

It was at Sunnyside, on a glorious afternoon in June, 1855, that, surrounded by scenery which Irving has best described, he thus continued his reminiscences of one who had loved him so well, and "loved him to the end."

"I was in London when Scott arrived, after his attack of paralysis, on his way to the continent in search of health. I received a note from Lockhart, begging me to come and take dinner with Scott and himself the next day. When I entered the room, Scott grasped my hand, and looked me steadily in the face. 'Time has dealt gently with you, my friend, since we parted,' he exclaimed—he referred to the difference in himself since we had met. At dinner, could see that Scott's mind was failing. He was painfully conscious of it himself. He would talk with much animation, and we would listen with the most respectful attention; but there was an effort and an embarrassment in his manner—he knew all was not right. It was very distressing, and we [Irving, Lockhart, and Anne Scott] tried to keep up the conversation between ourselves, that Sir Walter might talk as little as possible. After dinner he took my arm to walk up-stairs, which he did with difficulty. He turned and looked in my face, and said, 'They need not tell a man his mind is not affected when his body is as much impaired as mine.' This was my last interview with Scott. I heard afterwards that he was better, but I never saw him again."

Two years later, in narrating the same event, Irving told us that as Scott passed up the stairs with him after dinner he remarked,

"Times are sadly changed with me since we walked up the Highland hills together."

The improvement to which Irving refers was but temporary: health came not with the bracing breezes of the sea, nor with the soft sopor of Italia: the tender offices of friends, the eager but subdued seal of admiring strangers, were not unrewarded by evidences of benightment to him to whom they were profusely proffered; the phymeal man was strengthened: but the once glorious mind, —alas! who could that "light return"?

After an absence of between six and seven months, (he left England October 29,) Sir Walter and his party returned to London on the 13th of June, 1832, and there remained until the 7th of July:

"During these melancholy weeks great interest and sympathy were manifested. Allan Cunningham mentions that, walking home late one night, he found several working-men standing together at the corner of Jernyn Street, and one of them asked him, as if there were but one death-bed in London, 'Do you know, sir, if this is the street where he is lying?' The inquiries both at the hotel and at my house were incessant; and I think there was hardly a member of the royal family who did not send every day."—LOCKHART: Life of Scott, chap. lxxxiii.

In continuation, let us borrow a few lines from that most curious and pleasing chronicle, Allan Cunningham's son's (Peter Cunningham's) Hand-Book of London, Past and Present:

"The St James Hotel, No 76, on the south side, was the last London lodging of Sir Walter Scott. Here he lay for a period of three weeks after his return from the Continent, either in absolute stupor or in a waking dream. The room he occupied was the second-floor back room, and the author of this collection of London memoranda delights in remembering the universal feeling of sympathy exhibited by all (and there were many there) who stood to see the great novelist and poet carried from the hotel to his carriage on the afternoon of the 7th of July, 1832. Many were eager to see so great a man, but all mere curiosity seemed to cease when they saw the vacant eye and prostrate figure of the illustrious poet. There was not a covered head, and, the writer believes,—from what he could see,—hardly a dry eye, on the occasion."—Edition of 1860, 265.

"As we rounded the hill at Ladhope," says Lockhart, "and the outline of the Eldons burst on him, he became greatly excited, and when, turning himself on his couch, his eye caught at length his own towers, at the distance of a mile, he sprang up with a cry of delight. . . . Mr Laidlaw was waiting at the porch, and assisted us in lifting him into the dining-room, where his bed had been prepared. He sat bewildered for a few moments, and then, resting his eye on Laidlaw, said, 'Ha! Willie Laidlaw! O man, how often have I thought of you!' By this time his dogs had assembled about his chair—they began to fawn upon him and lick his hands, and he alternately sobbed and smiled over them until sleep oppressed him."

The day following he was perfectly conscious, and on the next morning still better. Placed by the central window, that he might "look down upon the Tweed," "he expressed a wish that I should read to him, and when I asked from what book, he said, 'Need you ask? There is but one.' I chose the 14th chapter of St John's Gospel, he listened with mild emotion, and said, when I had done, 'Well, this is a great comfort. I have followed you distinctly, and I feel as if I were to be myself again.' In this placid frame he was again put to bed, and had many hours of soft slumber."

THE CLOSING SCENE

"As I was dressing on the morning of Monday, the 17th of September, Nicolson came into my room, and told me that his master had awoke in a state of composure and consciousness, and wished to see me immediately. I found him entirely himself, though in the last extreme of feebleness. His eye was clear and calm—every trace of the wild fire of delirium extinguished. 'Lockhart,' he said, 'I may have but a minute to speak to you. My dear, be a good man—be virtuous—be religious. Nothing else will give you any comfort when you come to lie here.' He paused, and I said, 'Shall I send for Sophia and Anne?' 'No,' said he; 'don't disturb them, poor souls! I know they were up all night—God bless you all!' With this he sunk into a very tranquil sleep, and, indeed, he scarcely afterwards gave any sign of consciousness, except for an instant on the arrival of his sons. They, on learning that the scene was about to close, obtained a new leave of absence from their posts, and both reached Abbotsford on the 19th. About half-past one P.M. on the 21st of September, Sir Walter breathed his last, in the presence of all his children. It was a beautiful day,—so warm that every window was wide open, and so perfectly still that the sound of all others most delicious to his ear, the gentle ripple of the Tweed over its pebbles, was distinctly audible as we knelt around the bed and his eldest son kissed and closed his eyes."

THE BURIAL

"His funeral was conducted in an unostentatious manner, but the attendance was very great. Few of his old friends then in Scotland were absent, and many, both friends and strangers, came from a great distance. His old domestics and foresters made it their petition that no hiring hand might assist in carrying his remains. They themselves bore the coffin to the hearse, and from the hearse to the grave. . . . The court-yard and all the precincts of Abbotsford were crowded with uncovered spectators as the procession was arranged, and as it advanced through Darriack and Melrose, and the adjacent villages, the whole population appeared at their doors in like manner, almost all in black. The train of carriages extended, I understand, over more than a mile; the yeomanry followed in great numbers on horseback; and it was late in the day ere we reached Dryburgh. Some accident, it was observed, had caused the hearse to halt for several minutes on the summit of the hill at Bemerside,—exactly where a prospect of remarkable richness opens, and where Sir Walter had always been accustomed to rein his horse. The day was dark and lowering, and the wind high."

"The wide enclosure at the Abbey of Dryburgh was thronged with old and young; and when the coffin was taken from the hearse and again laid on the shoulders of the afflicted serving-men, one deep sob burst from a thousand lips. Mr Archdeacon Williams read the Burial Service of the Church of England; and thus, about half-past five o'clock in the evening of Wednesday, the 20th September, 1832, the remains of Sir Walter Scott were laid by the side of his wife in the sepulchre of his ancestors, 'in sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be like unto his glorious body, according to the mighty working whereby he is able to subdue all things to himself!'"

In that "sure and certain hope" the son-in-law and biographer has since been "gathered to his fathers;" and in the column which commemorates this event we find some reflections which will fitly conclude this portion of our sketch:

"The whole family history of Scott and Lockhart affords a striking instance of the 'vanity of human wishes.' Scott's chief ambition was to be a country laird, and the founder of a family of the Scotts of Abbotsford. His inward thought was that his house should continue forever, and the land be called after his own name. Of Scott's four children, the elder son [Walter] died childless in India, and the other [Charles] unmarried in Persia. The younger daughter [Anne] died not long after her father, and Mrs Lockhart [Sophia] four years later. Her elder boy, the Hugh Little-John for whom Scott had written his Tales of a Grandfather, had died some years before. Lockhart had then a son, (Walter Scott, b. 1826,) who is since dead, and his only daughter [Charlotte Harriet Jane] has adopted views [in the Roman communion] widely alien from the early associations of Abbotsford. She was married in 1847 to James Robert Hope Esq., barrister-at-law, a younger son of the late General the Hon. Sir Alexander Hope, and has issue an only daughter, Mary Morrice, born in 1852."—Lon Times, Dec 1854, and Lon Gen. Mag., Jan 1855 attributed to Lord Robertson.

It only remains to add that Mr. James Robert Hope has since taken the name of Scott, and has had two other children, — Margaret Anne Mary Scott, who d. Dec. 3, 1858, aged 11 weeks, and Walter Michael Scott, who d. also Dec. 3, 1858, aged 18 months. The only lineal descendant of Sir Walter at this moment, (Nov. 1869,) therefore, is his great-granddaughter, Mary Morrice Hope Scott, now about seventeen years of age.

Having thus presented a biographical sketch of the subject of our notice, we proceed to the remaining divisions of our article, viz .

Even the most hostile examiners were obliged to acknowledge that the gigantic career of their idol had been traced in its leading features with wonderful truth and spirit. In our notice of BARNATYNE, GEORGE, we have referred to that admirable volume, The Abbotsford Catalogue: why cannot the Messrs. Black publish editions of this work, to range with their various sets of Scott's works?

There has been recently pub., Memoirs of the Insurrection in Scotland in 1716; by John Master, of Sinclair; with Notes by Sir Walter Scott, Bart., Edited by David Laing and James Macknight, Edin., 1858, 4to, (Abbotsford Club.) Reviewed in Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 879.

Having thus presented a catalogue raisonné—we venture to call it the fullest and most accurate that has appeared—of Scott's publications, we proceed to notice—

III. STANDARD EDITIONS OF SCOTT'S WORKS.

Of Scott's Poetical Works there were collective editions pub. at Edinburgh: 1813, 9 vols. 8vo; 1815, 10 vols. r. 8vo; 1820, 12 vols. 8vo, (also Miscellaneous Poems, 1820, 8vo); 1822, 8 vols. 12mo; and his Historical Romances were pub. in 1822 in 6 vols. 8vo: also Novels and Tales, in 12 vols. 8vo: Tales and Romances, 7 vols. 8vo, &c.: editions, 1823, '24, '27. A collective edition of his Miscellaneous Prose Writings was pub. in 1827, 6 vols. 8vo.

Since these dates, many of his works have been published, in many shapes and in many places, on both sides of the Atlantic.

Waverley Novels.

I. Abbotsford edition, 1842-46, 12 vols. sup. r. 8vo, £16 16s.; new ed., 1852, £10 16s. With 120 engravings on steel and nearly 2000 on wood. There should accompany this set the Abbotsford: Poetical Works, 1 vol.; Miscellaneous Prose Writings, 1 vol.; Life of Napoleon, 1 vol.; Tales of a Grandfather, 1 vol.; Life by Lockhart, 1 vol.: in all, 17 vols. sup. r. 8vo, £20 18s. 6d. Roxburghe edition, Illustrated, 48 vols., 1867-68.

NOTICE

"EDINBURGH, 5th October, 1866.
"In consequence of statements regarding the expiry of the copyright of the Waverley Novels, the Publishers take this opportunity of reminding the Public that the only portion of these Works now out of copyright is that which was first issued from the press in 1814.

"SIR WALTER SCOTT, in 1829, carefully corrected and improved the text of this first issue to such an extent that hardly a page remained without material alteration, and, besides, added the Notes and Introductions.

"To this amended Edition he gave the name of the 'AUTHOR'S EDITION,' as being the only one he desired the Public to regard as bearing his sanction and approval.

"All other Editions must therefore be regarded as imperfect in the Text and incomplete in the Notes and Introductions.

"A. & C. BLACK"

"It is not generally known, we believe, that an expurgated edition of Walter Scott has been published for the benefit of Roman Catholics; but the fact is recorded in the new edition of Feller's 'Biographie Universelle,' published at Lyons, with a continuation by the Abbé Simonin. 'Though Walter Scott,' we are told, in the notice of his name, 'is not a romancer of the dangerous class, he gives, nevertheless, too lively a picture of the passions, and makes frequent attacks on Catholic institutions: this has led D'Exauvilles to undertake a new and abridged translation of his works, in which he has taken care to omit all that is condemnable. This translation is published under the auspices of the Society of St. Nicholas, No. 39 Rue de Sévres, Paris, and is principally suited for young persons.' It will be long, we presume, before there is any English 'Family Walter Scott' to take its place by the side of the Family Shakespeare."—Lon. Athen., 1861, ii. 609.

MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS.

I. Author's Favourite edition, 1834-36; last issue, 1861-62, 28 vols. fp. 8vo, (uniform with the Novels, 48 vols., Poetical Works, 12 vols., and Life by Lockhart, 10 vols.,) £4 4s. "This is the only edition which contains a complete collection of Scott's Biographies, Histories, and

Then we have the Waverley Gallery, Waverley Gems, and many other pictorial illustrations of the writings of this popular author. See the very full list (published about two years after this article was originally prepared for the press) of editions of Scott's works, &c., in Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 8, 1863, 2224-2229. We must not omit to notice: I. The Lady of the Lake, with Photographs by G. Wilson and T. Ogle, Lon., Bennett, sm. 4to, 1862, '64; II. Marmion, with Photographic Illustrations by Thomas Annan, Longman, 1865, sm. 4to.

The last American editions (vide infra) of Scott's Complete Works are those of T. B. Peterson & Brother, Phila., 1859, 10 vols. r. 8vo, (vol. x. containing Scott's Life by Lockhart,) $12; and 1867, 5 vols. 8vo; last American editions of his Poetical Works, Little, Brown & Co., Boston, 1857, 9 vols. 16mo, $6.75, (commended by N. Amer. Rev., lxxxvi. 59, by A. P. Peabody; lxxxvii. 293, by S. G. Brown; Ticknor & Fields, Boston, 1864, 9 vols. 16mo, $12; last American edition of his Novels, that by Ticknor & Fields, Boston, 1857-59, 50 vols. 16mo, $37.50, (commended by N. Amer. Rev., lxxxv. 271, lxxxvi. 288, both by A. P. Peabody; lxxxvii. 293, by S. G. Brown.) It speaks well for the United States that during the twenty-five months of publication more than 200,000 volumes of this (the Household) edition were sold; and by July, 1861, the number had risen to 300,000. It was reissued, 1867-68, 25 vols., $37.50.

The same enterprising house has supplemented this beautiful series of the Novels by a new edition of Lockhart's Life of Scott, in 9 vols. 16mo, 1861-62. This edition professes to be "much fuller than any other ever published, containing several Biographical Notes not included in the Edinburgh copy." The American edition of Lockhart's Life of Scott, which immediately preceded that of Ticknor & Fields, was that of C. S. Francis & Co., of Boston, 1357, 8 vols. in 4, 12mo. Ticknor & Fields also publish, uniform with the two preceding series, Scott's Tales of a Grandfather, 6 vols. 16mo, 1861. Recapitulation of their editions: Novels, 50 vols.; Lockhart's Memoir, 9 vols.; Poems, 9 vols.; Tales of a Grandfather, 6 vols.: in all, 74 vols. 16mo. To these, Fields, Osgood & Co. have added: Poetical Works, Diamond edition, 1869, and Red Line edition, with 12 illustrations, 1869, sm. 4to. D. Appleton & Co., New York, published a Globe edition, 1868, 16mo, and an edition of the Waverley Novels, 1868-69, 26 vols., $6. T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, issued an edition of the same, 1868-69, 25 vols., $5, editions of the Poems, Waverley Novels, and Tales of a Grandfather were published in London and Edinburgh in 1868-69; and A. & C. Black are now (1869) issuing a new edition of Lockhart's Life of Scott, 10 vols. fp. 8vo, Roxburghe binding, £1 15s. After a silence of thirty years respecting Lockhart's Memoirs of Scott, the London Quarterly Review reviewed the work in January, 1868.

"Men do not write freely," says the reviewer, "about those whom they have long loved and recently lost, and so year after year stole away without any notice being taken of perhaps the very best piece of biography which is to be found in the English or any other modern language."

"But time, which softens men's regrets, awakens, or ought to awaken, them to a sense of duty; and duty rather to the living than to the dead requires that the silence which we have thus far maintained should at length be broken."

It was announced by A. & C. Black & Co. in 1852 (Lon. Athenæum, 504) that "Since the first publication of the Waverley Novels not fewer than One Hundred and Twenty Thousand copies have been sold in this country, and at least as many in the United States."

According to Great Facts, published in 1858,

"Upwards of 3500 tons' weight of paper have been consumed in producing the various editions of Sir Walter Scott's Writings and Life, and the duty paid to Government on the paper, even at the present reduced rate, amounts to no less a sum than £51,450."

The £125,000 (we exclude the £22,000 life insurance) paid by the proceeds of Scott's writings to his creditors appears a very large coinage of one man's brain, but, according to Mr. Howitt's elaborate calculation, (Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets, vol. ii.,) "it appears certain that his works must have produced to the author or his trustees, at the very least, half a million of money!"—say two million two hundred and twenty-two thousand dollars. And, if this sum represents only the profits of the author and his assigns, how vast must be the amount expended by the public for Scott's Works!

IV. SCOTT THE POET.

For these latter divisions of our sketch we had marked out many passages of acute criticisms by many of the most eminent critics of the past half-century. But here, as elsewhere, we are straitened in our limits, and must omit much more than we quote.

"Confident in the force and originality of his own genius, he has not been afraid to avail himself of commonplaces both of diction and of sentiment, whenever they appeared to be beautiful and impressive,—using them, however, at all times with the skill and spirit of an inventor; and, quite certain that he could not be mistaken for a plagiarist or imitator, he has made free use of that great treasury of characters, images, and expressions which had been accumulated by the most celebrated of his predecessors,—at the same time that the rapidity of his transitions, the novelty of his combinations, and the spirit and variety of his own thoughts and inventions, show plainly that he was a borrower from any thing but poverty, and took only what he would have given if he had been born in an earlier generation. The great secret of his popularity, however, and the leading characteristic of his poetry, appear to us to consist evidently in this, that he has made more use of common topics, images, and expressions than any original poet of later times, and, at the same time, displayed more genius and originality than any recent author who has worked in the same materials. By the latter peculiarity he has entitled himself to the admiration of every description of readers; by the former he is recommended in an especial manner to the inexperienced,—at the hazard of some little offence to the more cultivated and fastidious. . . . Among his minor peculiarities we might notice his singular talent for description, and especially for the description of scenes abounding in motion or action of any kind. In this department, indeed, we conceive him to be almost without a rival, either among modern or ancient poets; and the character and process of his descriptions are as extraordinary as their effect is astonishing."—Lord Jeffrey: Edin. Rev. Aug. 1810, 269, 270, 272. repub. in his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., ed. 1863, 469, 470, 471. See, also, 534.

"Though greatly inferior in many things to his illustrious brethren, [Wordsworth and Byron,] Scott is perhaps, after all, the most unequivocally original. We do not know of any model after which the form of his principal Poems has been moulded. They bear no resemblance, and, we must allow, are far inferior, to the heroic Poems of Greece; nor do they, though he has been called the Ariosto of the North, seem to us to resemble, in any way whatever, any of the great Poems of modern Italy. He has given a most intensely real representation of the living spirit of the chivalrous age of his country. He has not shrouded the figures or the characters of his heroes in high poetical lustre, so as to dazzle us by resplendent fictitious beings shining through the scenes and events of a half-imaginary world. They are as much real men in his poetry as the 'mighty Easles' of old are in our histories and annals. The incidents, too, and events, are all wonderfully like those of real life, and when we add to this, that all the most interesting and impressive superstitions and fancies of the times are in his poetry incorporated and intertwined with the ordinary tissue of mere human existence, we feel ourselves hurried from this our civilized age back into the troubled boom of semi-barbarous life, and made keen partakers in all its impassioned and poetical credulities.—His poems are historical narrations, true in all things to the spirit of his history, but everywhere overspread with those bright and breathing colours which only genius can bestow on reality, and when it is recollected that the times in which the scenes are laid and his heroes act were distinguished by many of the most energetic virtues that can grace or dignify the character of a free people, and marked by the operation of great passions and important events, every one must feel that the poetry of Walter Scott is, in the noblest sense of the word, national, that it breathes upon us the bold and heroic spirit of perturbed but magnificent ages, and connects us, in the midst of philosophy, science, and refinement, with our turbulent but high-minded ancestors, of whom we have no cause to be ashamed, whether looked on in the fields of war or in the halls of peace. He is a true knight in all things,—free, courteous, and brave. War, as he describes it, is a noble game, a kingly pastime. He is the greatest of all War-Poets. His poetry might make a very coward fearless!"—PROFESSOR JOHN WILSON Blackie Mag. July, 1818, 369, 370 repub. in his Works, v. 1856, 388. See, also, viii 420, and Recreations of Christopher North.

"Let me talk to you of the Prince Regent. He ordered me to be presented to him at a ball; and, after some sayings peculiarly pleasing from royal lips as to my own attempts, he talked to me of you and your Immortalities. He preferred you to every bard, past and present, and asked which of your works pleased me most. It was a difficult question. I answered, I thought the Lay. He said his own opinion was nearly similar. In speaking of the others, I told him that I thought you more particularly the poet of Princes, as they never appeared more fascinating than in Marmion and the Lady of the Lake. He was pleased to coincide, and to dwell on the description of your Jamies as no less royal than poetical. He spoke alternately of Homer and yourself, and seemed well acquainted with both."—Lord Byron to Scott, July 6, 1812. Lockhart's Scott, chap. xxiv.

"Scott is a poet truly national and heroic. He finds his scenes in his native land, and his heroes and heroines in British history and tradition. There is an astonishing ease, vehemence, and brightness in his verse, his poems are a succession of historical figures, with all the well-defined proportions of statues,—with this difference, that they act and speak according to the will of the poet. Yet, though in external elegance and precision of outline they resemble works of art, they have less of the repose of sculpture about them than any characters in modern song. No one since the days of Homer has sung with such an impetuous and burning breath the muster, the march, the onset, and all the hery vicissitudes of battle!"—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit. of the Last Fifty Years, 1833.

"It were late in the day to write criticisms on those Metrical Romances at the same time, the great popularity they had seems natural enough. In the first place, there was the indisputable impress of worth, of genuine human force, in them. This, which lies in some degree, or is thought to lie, at the bottom of all popularity, did to an unusual degree disclose itself in these rhymed romances of Scott. Pictures were actually painted and presented; human emotions conceived and sympathized with. Considering that wretched Della-Cruscan and other vamping up of old worn-out tatters was the staple article then, it may be granted that Scott's excellence was superior and supreme. When a Hayley was the main singer, a Scott might well be hailed with warm welcome."—THOMAS CARLYLE Lon. and Westm. Rev. 1838: repub. in his Crit. and Miscell. Essays.

"Compared with true and great poets, our Scottish Minstrel is but 'a metre ballad-monger.' We would rather have written one song of Burns, or a single passage in Lord Byron's 'Heaven and Earth,' or one of Wordsworth's 'Fancies and Good-Nights,' than all his epics. What is he to Spenser, over whose immortal, ever-amiable verse beauty hovers and trembles, and who has shed the purple light of fancy from his ambrosial wings over all nature? What is there of the might of Milton, whose head is canopied in the blue serene, and who makes us to sit with him there? What is there (in his ambling rhymes) of the deep pathos of Chaucer? Or of the o'er-informing power of Shakespeare, whose eye, watching alike the minutest traces of character and the strongest movements of passion, 'glances from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven,' and with the lambent flame of genius, playing round each object, lights up the universe in a robe of its own radiance? Sir Walter has no voluntary power of combination: all his associations (as we said before) are those of habit or of tradition. He is a mere narrative and descriptive poet, garrulous of the old time. The definition of his poetry is a pleasing superficiality."—HARLETT: Spirit of the Age. Sir Walter Scott.

"Speaking of the poets of the day, Sir James [Macintosh] observed, 'I very much doubt whether Scott will survive long. Hitherto nothing has stood the test of time but laboured and finished verse; and of this Scott has none. If I were to say which of the poets of the day is most likely to be read hereafter, I should give my opinion in favor of some of Campbell's poems. Scott, however, has a wonderful fertility and vivacity.' It may be proper to add that the allusion is here exclusively to the poetry of Scott. The Waverley Novels were not generally attributed to him when the remark was made."—ALEXANDER H. ECCLERT: Conversations with Sir J. Macintosh in 1817: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1882, 448, n.

V. SCOTT THE NOVELIST.

"We esteem the productions which the great novelist of Scotland has poured forth with startling speed from his rich treasury, not only as multiplying the sources of delight to thousands, but as shedding the most genial influences on the taste and feeling of the people. . . . His persons are no shadowy abstractions,—no personifications of a dogma,—no portraits of the author, varied in costume but similar in features. With all their rich varieties of character, whether their heroic spirit touches on the godlike or their wild eccentricities border on the farcical, they are men fashioned of human earth and warm with human sympathies. He does not seek for the sublime in the mere intensity of burning passion, or for sources of enjoyment in those feverish gratifications which some would teach us to believe the only felicities worthy of high and impassioned souls. He writes everywhere with a keen and healthful relish for all the good things of life,—constantly refreshes us, where we least expected it, with a sense of that pleasure which is spread through the earth 'to be caught in stray gifts by whoever will find,' and brightens all things with the spirit of gladness. There is little of a meditative or retrospective cast in his works. Whatever age he chooses for his story, lives before us we become contemporaries of all his persons, and sharers in all their fortunes. Of all men who have ever written, excepting Shakespeare, he has perhaps the least of exclusiveness, the least of those feelings which keep men apart from their kind. He has his own predilections,—and we love him the better for them, even when they are not ours,—but they never prevent him from grasping with cordial spirit all that is human. His tolerance is the most complete, for it extends to adverse bigotries, his love of enjoyment does not exclude the ascetic from his respect, nor does his fondness for hereditary rights and time-honoured institutions prevent his admiration of the fiery zeal of a sectary. His genius shines with an equal light on all,—illuminating the vast hills of purple heath, the calm breast of the quiet water, and the rich masses of the grove,—now gleaming with a sacred light on the distant towers of some old monastery, now softening the green-wood shade, now piercing the gloom of the rude cave where the old Covenanters lie,—free and universal and bounteous as the sun, and pouring its radiance with a like impartiality 'upon a living and rejoicing world.'"—SIR T. N. TALFOURD: New Month Mag. repub. in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"The works of Scott produce their effect rather by the combination of many qualities than the predominance of any. In depth of feeling, we think he yields to the author of Annals, in invention of incident and disposition of plot, he is equalled by many, his humour will hardly bear a comparison with that of Sterne, or the best parts of Fielding; and in the direct and forcible expression of the stronger passions, we should be inclined to give the preference both to Godwin and the author of Valerius. But his strength lies in the possession and harmonious adjustment of most of the qualities requisite to the novelist, none engrossing the whole mind, none excluding another, but all working together in kindly union: learning arrayed in the most picturesque combinations; observation of life embodied not in abstractions, but in living forms; humour springing out of tenderness, like smiles struggling through tears; the spirit of ancient knighthood leavening the worldly wisdom of modern times; and the imagination of the poet adorning, without impeding, the common sympathies and good-humoured sagacity of the man."—PROFESSOR GEORGE MOIR: Encyc. Brit., art. Romance.

"It is the great glory of Scott that, by nice attention to costume and character in his novels, he has raised them to historic importance without impeding their interest as works of art. Who now would imagine that he could form a satisfactory notion of the golden days of Queen Bess that had not read 'Kenilworth,' or of Richard Cœur de Lion and his brave paladins that had not read 'Ivanhoe'? . . . Scott was, in truth, master of the picturesque. He understood better than any historian since the time of Livy how to dispose his lights and shades so as to produce the most striking result. This property of romance he had a right to borrow. This talent is particularly observable in the animated parts of his story,—in his battles, for example. We man has painted those terrible scenes with greater effect. . . . It is when treading on Scottish ground that he seems to feel all his strength. 'I seem always to step more firmly,' he said to some one, 'when on my own native heather.' His mind was steeped in Scottish lore, and his bosom warmed with a sympathetic glow for the age of chivalry."—WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT: Biog. and Crit. Macaul., ed. 1855, 284, 285, 286. See, also, 54, 180, 189, 606, n. 623, 702; N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. 187.

"Two of Moore's contemporaries must be placed above him in any fair estimate of the authors of the first part of the nineteenth century. Byron rose as a poet above all his rivals. . . . Scott is the other wonder of this age. Picturesque, interesting, and hard-like as are his narrative poems, the pathos, humour, description, character, and, above all, the marvellous fertility, displayed in the novels, show far greater power. A whole region of the territory of Imagination is occupied by this extraordinary man, alone and unapproachable. . . . The novels of Scott will furnish entertainment to many generations; nor is there likely to be any race of men so fastidious as to require any thing purer, so spoilt by excitement as to need any thing more amusing, or so grave as to scorn all delight from this kind of composition."—LORD JOHN RUSSELL: Memoirs, &c. of Thomas Moore, 1853, i., Pref., xxvii. See, also, vol. viii., Index.

"Few of the innumerable readers of Sir Walter have had personal means of judging of the fidelity of his pictures of the manners and ideas of the Scotch peasants in his earlier novels; but yet there is no one in any country who does not at once see that they have been drawn from nature and contain the most faithful picture of it. It is the fidelity of this picture which gives the Scotch novels their great charm."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Essays, ed. 1850, iii. 547.

"Macintosh was very cheerful when he joined us at dinner,—none the worse for his long, studious morning. On some observations of mine about the comparatively uninteresting character of Waverley, at 1 of the leading characters, or rather the heroes, of some other of Walter Scott's novels, he said that Sir Walter was most successful in the low Scotch characters. Old Maule, Cuddie, &c. were the most valuable additions he had brought to the general stock of original characters. 'Scott,' he said, 'is very cold in some parts of his Scottish history, particularly in the parts about Bruce and Wallace. The Second Series of Tales of a Grandfather are by far the best of the three.'"—Life of Sir J. Macintosh, ii. chap. vii.

"Scott writes prose very well. I discover this in the notes to a bad poem, [The Vision of Don Roderick:] In those to a good one, it had escaped me."—SIR J. MACINTOSH: Life, ii. chap. iii. "The style of the author of Waverley, as mere style, is villainous."—HARLETT: Table-Talk, Ser. I., Essay XXIV. On the Prose Style of Poets.

"The illustrious painter of Scotland seems to me to have created a false class, he has, in my opinion, confounded history and romance: the novelist has set about writing historical romances, and the historian romantic histories. . . . I refuse, therefore, to sit in judgment on any English author whose merit does not appear to me to reach that degree of superiority which it has in the eyes of his countrymen."—VISCOUNT DE CHATEAUBRIAND: *Sketches of Eng. Mr. Rush tells us (Narrative of a Residence at the Court of London, 1817-25) that, at a dinner at Holland House, Lady Holland proposed that each of the company should write on a separate piece of paper the name of his favourite of the Waverley Novels. Nine papers were handed in, each with a title different from the rest.

VI. GENERAL CHARACTER AND INFLUENCE OF SCOTT'S WRITINGS.

"Up to the era of Sir Walter, living people had some vague, general, indistinct notions about dead people mouldering away to nothing, centuries ago, in regular kirky-yards and chance burial-places, 'mang mairs and mosses many O,' somewhere or other in that difficultly-distinguished and very debatable district called the Borders. All at once he touched their tombs with a divining-rod, and the turf streamed out ghosts, some in woodmen's dresses, most in warrior's mail; queer archers leaped forth, with y w bows and quivers, and giants stalked shaking spears! The gray chronicler smiled, and, taking up his pen, wrote in lines of light the annals of the chivalrous and heroic days of old feudal Scotland. The nation then, for the first time, knew the character of its ancestors, for these were not spectres—not they, indeed,—nor phantoms of the brain, but gaunt flesh and blood, or glad and glorious,—base-born cottage churls of the olden time, because Scottish, became familiar to the love of the nation's heart, and so to its pride did the high-born lineage of palace kings. . . . We know now the character of our own people as it showed itself in war and peace—in palace, castle, hall, hut, hovel, and shieling—through centuries of advancing civilization, from the time when Edinburgh was ycleped Auld Reekie, down to the period when the bright idea first occurred to her inhabitants to call her the Modern Athens."—PROF. JOHN WILSON: Recreations of Christopher North.

"He opened up on every side new scenes of invention. In poetry and romance, he showed that there was not a corner of these islands which was not, so far from being exhausted, standing thick with the richest materials for the most wonderful and beautiful creations. The reign of the schoolmen and of the copyists was at an end. Nature, history, tradition, life, every thing and every place, were shown by this new and vigorous spirit to be full of overflowing with what had been, in the dim eyes of former not-distant geniuses, only dry bones, but which, at the touch of this bold seeromancer, sprung up living forms of the most fascinating grace. . . . The whole land seemed astir with armies, insurrections, pageantries of love, and passages of sorrow, that for twenty years kept the enraptured public in a trance, as it were, of one accumulating marvel and joy. There seemed no bounds to his powers, or the fields of his operations."

—WILLIAM HOWITT: Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets. Scott.

"No writer ever exercised so great an influence over the public mind, or led to so much conscious or unconscious imitation. His influence on Italy, France, and Germany we shall afterwards have occasion to notice. On the literature of Great Britain we believe it to have exerted on the whole a most beneficial effect; not, indeed, that any professed imitation of his manner has yet appeared which possesses great claims to genius, but that he has caused a higher spirit into novel-writing,—taught us how the simple feelings of peasants, and the humble pathos of humble life, and the relatings of feeling among the outcasts of society, might be made to blend with scenes of high imagination; that his writings are calculated to strengthen the ties of our common humanity, that they never tend to foster a bad, or to throw ridicule upon a good or generous, feeling; while, speaking of them in a merely literary point of view, they taught lessons of simplicity, good taste, moderation, and skill in seizing the best points both of character and description, which have not been without their effect even on those by whom the mere manner of Scott, or his choice of subjects, have been studiously avoided."

—PROF. GEORGE MORRIS: Envy, Brit., and Romance.

"Criticism on his works is now superfluous. They have taken their enduring station in the literature of the world. If the applause of foreign nations be equivalent, as it is said, to the voice of posterity, no author who ever wrote has obtained that honour in so large a measure. His novels, his poems, have been translated into every civilized language, his heroes and heroines have become household words all over the world. The painter, the sculptor, the engraver, the musician, have sought inspiration from his pages. The names of his works, or the personages introduced into them, are impressed on the man-of-war or the quadrille, the race-horse or the steamboat. The number of persons who became famous by following, in their different lines, the ideas of Sir Walter, is immense, and comprehends all classes of intellect or enterprise. The tribes of imitators, whether of his verse or prose, whom he has called into existence, are countless. Many of them are persons of great abilities and unquestioned genius. Which of them will be named in competition with the master? Not one!"—DR. WILLIAM MAGINN: Fraser's Mag., October, 1832, repub. in his Miscell. Writings, ed. by Dr. R. S. Mackenzie, 1857, v. 176. See, also, iv. 240, n.

"Sir Walter Scott is universally considered as the greatest writer of imagination of this century, and his reputation has been so wide-spread and lasting, that it may reasonably be anticipated that it will not materially decline in succeeding times. Like most other great men, the direction of his genius was, in a great degree, determined by the circumstances in which he arose, but its character was exclusively his own. He rose to manhood during the heart-stirring conflict with the French Revolution, and his mind, naturally ardent, was early inflamed by the patriotic and warlike feelings which that contest naturally produced. A volunteer himself in the yeomanry ranks, his animated strains induced many to follow his example. The influence of those circumstances is very conspicuous in his writings, and many of the finest passages in his descriptions of Flodden and Bannockburn were suggested by the mimic warfare on Portobello Sands, near Edinburgh, where his corps exercised. This in some degree directed the application, but it did not stamp the character of his genius. That was entirely his own. Close observation of nature, whether animated or inanimate, was his great characteristic; the brilliancy of fancy, the force of imagination, were directed to clothing with sparkling colours her varied creations. It is hard to say whether his genius was most conspicuous in describing the beauties of nature or delineating the passions of the heart: he was at once pictorial and dramatic. To this he owes his great success,—hence his world-wide reputation. He was first known as a poet, but, charming as his poetic conceptions were, they were long eclipsed by the wide-spread fame of his prose romances. The novels of the Author of Waverley caused the Poems of Walter Scott to be for a time forgotten. But time has re-established them in their celebrity, and, great as is still the fame of the Scotch novels, it is rivalled by the heart-stirring verses of Marmion, the enduring charm of the Lady of the Lake. . . . No man ever threw a more charming radiance over the traditions of ancient times, but none ever delineated in a nobler spirit the virtues of the present, and his discriminating eye discovered them equally under the thatch of the cottage as in the halls of the castle. It has been truly said that the influence of his writings neutralised, to a certain extent, the effect of the Reform Bill; but it is not less true that none ever contributed more powerfully to that purification without which all others are nugatory,—the reform of the human heart; and perhaps he is the only author of numerous works of fiction of whom it may with truth be said that he never wrote a line which, on death-bed, he could wish recalled."

"The works of Walter Scott have incorporated themselves with the thoughts and concerns of the whole civilized world for more than a quarter of a century, and have had a controlling influence over the age in which he lived. Who is there that, on looking back over a great portion of his life, does not find the genius of Scott administering to his pleasures, beguiling his cares, and soothing his lonely sorrows?"—WASHINGTON LIVING.

"It has been observed that one of the curious contrasts which make up that complex creature, Walter Scott, is the strong attraction which drew him, as a Lowlander the born natural antagonist of the Gael, to the Highland people. Looking back on the Celtic clans, as we happily may, as a thing of the far past, softened by distance, coloured by the finest tints of poetry, and with that background of noble scenery which has afforded to many of us such pure and lofty pleasure, we cannot conceive without a painful effort that within a few years of Scott's own birth the Highlander had been to the Lowlander much what the Hindoo—the Afghan or Mahatta at least—is at present to the Englishman. All that we admire in the Gael had been to the Scot proper the source of contempt and of repugnance. Such a feeling is one of the worst instincts of human nature; it is an unmistakable part of the brute animal within us; more than any other cause, the hatred of race to race has hampered the progress of man. There is also no feeling which is more persistent and obstinate. But it has been entirely conquered in case of the Saxon and the Gael. Now, this vast and salutary change in national opinion is directly due to Scott. Something of the kind might possibly have come with time; but he, in fact, was the man whose lot was to accomplish it. This may be regarded, on the whole, as his greatest achievement. He united the sympathies of two hostile races by the sheer force of genius. He healed the bitterness of centuries. Scott did much in idealizing, as poetry should, the common life of his contemporaries. He equally did much in rendering the past history, and the history of other countries in which Scotchmen played a conspicuous part, real to us. But it is hardly a figure of speech to say that he created the Celtic Highlands in the eyes of the whole civilized world. If this be not first-rate power, it may be asked where we are to find it?"—F. VII. SCOTT THE MAN.

Referring the reader to Scott's Autobiography and Diary, and the full-length portrait by the skilful hand of Mr. Lockhart, for a faithful presentment of the personal characteristics of the illustrious author, we borrow a few lines from the many eulogiums of Sir Walter which have been offered to the curiosity of his admirers:

"In September, 1828, Richardson and I visited Scott for a few days at Abbotsford, and had the rare good fortune to find him nearly alone, and nothing could be more delightful. His simplicity and naturalness after all his fame are absolutely incredible. I remember him when he was famous for almost nothing except imitating Eskgrove, (a power which, fortunately, he has never lost,) and his manners are the same now that they were then. No bad idea will be formed of Scott's conversation by supposing one of his Scotch novels to be out into talk. It is not so much conversation as a joyous flow of anecdote, story, character, and scene, mostly humorous, always graphic, and never personal or ill-natured. His habits at this time were these: he rose about six, wrote from about half-past six till nine,—the Second Series of the Tales of a Grandfather being then the work, breakfasted and lounged from nine to eleven; wrote from eleven till about two, walked till about four, dined at five, partaking freely, but far from immoderately, of various wines, and then, as soon as the ladies withdrew, taking to cigars and hot whiskey-toddy, went to the drawing-room soon, where he invited everybody with his passion for Scotch music, and, if anxiously asked, never refused to recite any old ballad or tell any old tale. The house was asleep by eleven. When fitted up for dinner, he was like any other comfortably ill-dressed gentleman. But in the morning, with the large coarse jacket, great stick, and leathern cap, he was Dandy Diamond, or Dirk Hattick,—a smuggler or a poacher. Would that his money and his care had been given to a better subject than Abbotsford!"—LORD COCKBURN.

Memorials of his Own Time, 1856, chap. vii. See, also, chap. iv.

"His chief merits in society were a cheerful tone, an inexhaustible memory, and a fund of anecdotes and stories which he told with strong Scottish humour, aided by a strong Scottish accent. But in order to see Walter Scott at his ease it was necessary to see him at the head of his own table, or, at least, in his own country. When he came to London, he was stiff and constrained, and seemed always apprehensive of remarks which he should feel bound to resent. The consequence was that his London acquaintances were equally constrained with him. But put him in his own house, surround him with friends, and there could not be a more agreeable or a more unaffected member of society. He enjoyed his pony, and his dogs, as if he had been the homeliest squire in Tweedside."—LORD JOHN RUSSELL. Memorials, &c. of Thomas Moore, vi., 1853, xiv.

"What a happy genius that of Walter Scott! When a man can do great things only at the expense of severe, incessant labour, I don't know that he is much to be envied. It is almost sure to spoil his stomach and his temper, and to make him pass many dismal hours. The case is still worse where great talents are combined with a frantic misanthropy, like that of Rousseau and Byron. But it is hardly possible to conceive a more fortunate mortal than him that is possessed of such powers along with such felicity in the exercise of them, and who unites the finest genius to a cheerful, social disposition and an undiminished relish for the pursuits and amusements of ordinary life. He is a great poet grafted upon the excellent stock of a good-natured, Prudy, active, reasonable, companionable man."—HALL OF DUBLIN: Letters to the Bishop of Landaff, 1840, 8vo.

"Byron continually reverts to Sir Walter Scott, and always in terms of admiration for his genius and affection for his good qualities: he says that he never gets up from the perusal of one of his works without finding himself in a better disposition, and that he generally reads his novels three times. 'I find such a just mode of thinking,' said Byron, 'that I could fill volumes with detached thoughts from Scott, all and each full of truth and beauty. Then, how good are his definitions!' . . . 'I think,' continued Byron, after a pause, 'that Scott is the only very successful genius that could be cited as being as generally beloved as a man as he is admired as an author; and, I must add, he deserves it; for he is so thoroughly good-natured, sincere, and honest, that he disarms the envy and jealousy his extraordinary genius must excite. I hope to meet Scott once more before I die; for, worn out as are my affections, he still retains a strong hold of them.'—Countess of Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron.

"When I last wrote, I was about to be introduced to Sir Walter Scott. He quite answered all my expectations of him, and you may suppose they were very high. His manners are those of an amiable and unaffected man and a polished gentleman, and his conversation is something higher, for it is often quite as amusing and interesting as his novels, and without any apparent attempt at display. It flows from him in the most easy and natural manner. As I take it for granted that the most insignificant particulars relating to such a man will be interesting to you, I will give you a description of his personal appearance, and even his dress. He is tall and well formed, excepting one of his ankles and foot. (I think the right,) which is crippled and makes him walk very lamely. He is neither fat nor thin. His face is perfectly Scotch, and, though some people think it heavy, it struck me as a very agreeable one. He never could have been handsome. His forehead is very high, his nose short, his upper lip long, and the lower part of his face very fleshy. His complexion is fresh and clear, his eyes very blue, shrewd, and penetrating. I should say the predominant expression of his face is that of strong sense. His hair, which has always been very light, (as well as his eyebrows and eyelashes,) is now of a silvery whiteness, which makes him look somewhat older than he really is, (I believe forty-six is his age.) He was dressed in a brown frock-coat, blue trousers, and had on a black cravat. . . . All the portraits I have seen are somewhat like him, but none of them very strongly so."—C. R. Leslie to Miss Leslie, London, June 28, 1820. Leslie's Autograph Recollec., 1860, (q v., ch. iv., for Leslie's account of his visit at Abbotsford in 1824, when painting a portrait of Scott for Mr. George Ticknor, of Boston.)

"Of the many portraits of him, Chantrey's bust is, to my mind, the most perfect. Lawrence gave him a composure of manner which he never assumed; but in Chantrey's bust the gentle turn of the head, inclined a little forwards and down, and the lurking humour in the eyes and about the mouth, are Scott's own. Chantrey watched Sir Walter in company, and invited him to breakfast previous to the sittings, and by these means caught the expression that was most characteristic."—C. R. LESLIE ubi supra, ch. v.

"He the first gentleman of Europe! There is no stronger satire on the proud English society of that day than that they admired George. No, thank God, we can tell of better gentlemen. . . . I will take men of my own profession of letters. I will take Walter Scott, who loved the king, and who was his sword and buckler, and championed him like that brave highlander in his own story, who fights round his craven chief. What a good gentleman! What a friendly soul, what a generous hand, what an amiable life, was that of the noble Sir Walter!"—THACKERAY, George the Fourth.

"Such was the end of Sir Walter Scott. He died a great man, and, what is more, a good man. He has left us a double treasure,—the memory of himself, and the possession of his works. Both of them will endure."—Rev. W. E. GLADSTONE, Feb. 2, 1868.

"The surliest critic must allow that Scott was a genuine man, which itself is a great matter. No affectation, fanaticism, or distortion dwelt in him; no shadow of cant. Nay, withal, was he not a right brave and strong man, according to his kind? What a load of toil, what a measure of felicity, he quietly bore along with him!—with what quiet strength he both worked on the earth, and enjoyed in it, invincible to evil fortune and to good! A most composed invincible man; in difficulty and distress knowing no discouragement,—Samson-like, carrying off on his strong Samson-shoulders the gates that would imprison him,—in danger and menace, laughing at the whisper of fear. And then, with such a sunny current of true humour and humanity, a free joyful sympathy with so many things—what of fire he had all lying so beautifully latent, as radical latent heat, as fruitful internal warmth of life—a most robust healthy man. . . . No sounder piece of British manhood was put together in that eighteenth century of time. Alas! his fine Scotch face, with its shaggy honesty, sagacity, and goodness, when we saw it latterly on the Edinburgh streets, was all worn with care, the joy all fled from it,—ploughed deep with labour and sorrow. We shall never forget it; we shall never see it again. Adieu, 'Sir Walter, pride of all Scotchmen; take our proud and last farewell!'—THOMAS CARLILE, Lon. and Westm. Rev., 1838: re-pub. in his Essays.

For an interesting account of the sale of many of Scott's original manuscripts, novels, and poems, by order of the executors of the late Robert Cadell, see London Times, July 8, 1867. The whole were sold, in twelve lots, for 1255 guineas. We can now (1869) add something later:

"The sale of certain autographs of Sir Walter Scott's works took place in London on July 9th, [1868], and realized 2107s. It included Quentin Durward, The Abbot, St. Ronan's Well, Woodstock, Chronicles of the Canongate, (First and Second Series)

Tales of the Crusaders, The Betrothed and The Talisman, The Vision of Don Roderick, The Field of Waterloo, and several ballads and lyrical pieces; also the proof-sheets of Woodstock, The Pirate, Ivanhoe, The Bride of Lammermoor, Fortunes of Nigel, Quentin Durward, Peveril of the Peak, The Betrothed, The Talisman, in 12 vols. 8vo, with MS. notes by Mr James Ballantyne, and very extensive corrections and additions, and twenty-two letters, in the autograph of the author. The proof-sheets of the Life of Napoleon, in 9 vols. 8vo, with the author's corrections and additions, and his correspondence with Mr. James Ballantyne during the progress of the work, comprising fifty-seven interesting autograph letters, and The Tales of a Grandfather, 6 vols. 12mo, interleaved with numerous corrections and additions by the author. The MSS. had been the property of the late Mr. E. Cadell, the publisher, and were sold by order of his trustees, who desired to wind up his estate. Besides the MSS. of Scott's works, above named, (several of which were more or less imperfect,) there were one hundred and one letters from Scott to James Ballantyne, his printer and confidential friend, in reply to suggestions and criticisms on the works,—none of which were avowedly purchased for the British Museum. Mr. Henry Stevens, of Vermont, gave £25 for the proof-sheets of 'Peveril of the Peak,' (not the manuscript,) with Ballantyne's notes and Scott's corrections."—Amer. Lit. Gazette, Aug. 1, 1868, 159

Writing from Wales, a correspondent of The Illustrated Times says,

"I started, as you know, from Euston-square, and at the station I went to the book-stall to buy one of Scott's novels,—authorised sixpenny edition. I expected to see a huge pile stacked on the stall. I could not find one. 'Boy,' said I, 'where are the Scott novels?' 'Don't keep them,' he replied. 'Don't keep them! Why not?' 'Because if we did we should sell nothing else.' Here, then, to begin with, is a small fact worth reflecting upon. Some of these novels were first published more than fifty-six years ago, all have been in the hands of the public more than thirty-five years, for Sir Walter died in 1832, and still they are so popular that an experienced bookseller is afraid to have them on his stalls, because if they were there nobody would buy any thing else. You will perhaps say, 'Surely the boy was chaffing.' Well, I thought so at first; but when at every stall on the line I found that these novels were not kept, I came to the conclusion that the boy spoke the truth. Here, then, is an example of popularity I think quite unparalleled. Can you point to any other series of books, or even a single book, published from thirty-five to fifty years ago, a sixpenny edition of which Mr. Smith would be afraid to expose on his stalls for fear the public would refuse to buy any thing else?"—Sept 25, 1867

Scott, Winfield, Lieutenant-General U.S.A., b. June 13, 1786, near Petersburg, Virginia, educated at William and Mary College, was admitted to the Bar in 1806, appointed Captain in the United States Army in 1808, and was commander-in-chief 1841-Oct. 31, 1861. For notices of his distinguished services to his country we must refer to the biographies of him already chronicled: HEADLEY, REV. JOEL TYLER, No. 13, MANSFIELD, EDWARD DEERING, No. 3, Life of General Scott, by O. J. Victor, N. York, 1861, 12mo; General Scott and his Staff, Phila., 1848, 12mo; Campaign of General Scott in the Valley of Mexico, by Lieut. R. Semmes, Cin., 1852, 12mo; and articles in Amer. Whig Rev., ii. 276, v. 148, vii. 554, (by D. D. Barnard); Albion Mag., iv. 465; National Portrait-Gallery, vol. iv., ed. of 1838, or vol. i., ed. of 1852; Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1860-62, 316; Parton's General Butler in New Orleans, ch. v. He was the author of General Regulations for the Army, 1825, and published a work, taken from the French,—Infantry Tactics, N. York, 1835, 8 vols. 24mo, 1846, 3 vols. 24mo, new ed., 1866, 3 vols. 24mo. Abstract of Infantry Tactics, new ed., Phila., 1861, 12mo.

He wrote a pamphlet (originally pub. in the Phila. 1860

National Gazette in 1821) against the use of intoxicating liquors; a Letter to the Secretary of War, N. York, 1827, 8vo; a Letter on the Slavery Question, 1848, &c. In 1847 he declined the offer of the sovereignty of Mexico with a million of dollars as a bonus and two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annual salary. (See Lieber's Civil Liberty, &c., ed. 1859, 330.)

We add (1867) to the above list: Memoirs of Lieut.-General Scott, written by Himself, N. York, Nov. 12, 1864, 2 vols. 12mo, pp. xxii., 653; 1 p., in 1 vol. r. 8vo, $8, 250 copies, Dec. 15, 1864. Of the 12mo ed. 6 edits. were sold the first month.

"One, the great events of whose life are parts of the history of his country, should have been willing to trust his memory to his country's keeping. As it is, we can only hope that she will kindly forget his works in consideration of his deeds."—N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1866, 244.

Scrimger, Scrimgeour, or Scrimzeor, Henry, one of the most learned men of his age, was b. at Dundee, Scotland, 1506, educated at the University of St. Andrew's, at Paris, and at Bourges, and subsequently taught philosophy at Geneva; resided for some years in the library of the famous Ulrich Fugger, at Augsburg; again taught philosophy at Geneva for two years, 1563-4, and in 1565 opened in the same city a school for civil law, which he taught until his death, in 1572 or 1573. He pub. a Latin History of Franciscus Spira, probably printed at Basil in 1550 or 1551, and a translation of Justinian's Novels into Greek, Paris, 1558; again, with Holander's Latin version, Antw., 1575,—an edition "highly extolled both for the purity of its language and the accuracy of its execution." He left in MS. many notes on the works of Demosthenes, Eusebius, Cicero, and other authors, especially the Greek classics. Some of these were published among his own by Isaac Casaubon in his Athenai Deipnosophistarum; and others appeared in the Paris edition, 1620, of his Strabonis Geographiæ. Casaubon's edition of Diogenes Laertius, Paris, 1593, also profited by Scrimger's notes. The great Scotch critic's MSS. were inherited by his nephew, Sir Peter Young, and it is feared are now lost,—a loss deeply to be regretted. Among the eulogists of Scrimger's erudition are Thuanus, Casaubon, Henry Stephens, Dempster, and Paul Cujacius. See Mackenzie's Scotch Writers; Encyc. Sealsfield, Seatsfield, Sealesfield, Sealesfeald, (so he wrote his name in 1860,) or Seafeld, or, in German, Siegefeld, supposed by some to be an Austrian, by others a German, American, or native of Liverpool, was b., according to his own account, in 1797, resided for some years in the United States, and for about six months was connected with the Courrier des Etats-Unis of New York. In 1828 he was in Mexico, from thence went to Louisiana, thence to New York, and in 1832 retired to Switzerland, his chief residence until his death, at Solothurn, May 26, 1864. He affected mystery, and, as we have seen, gained his end. With the exception of No. 1, all of the following works (unless No. 7 should be excluded) are believed to have been first published in German; though in some cases he first wrote portions of them in English and then translated into German. 1. Takeah; or, The White Rose, Phila., 1828, 2 vols. 8vo. In German, by the author Der Legitime und der Republikaner, Zurich, 1832. 2. The Cabin Book; or, Sketches of Life in Texas; trans. by Ch. Fr. Mersch, N.

Hebbe, LL.D., and James Mackay, M.A., 7 Pts. 8vo, and all in 1 vol. 8vo, 1842, 1844. 7. Scenes and Adventures in Central America; edited by F. Hardman, Edin., 1852, 12mo. Many readers will remember the interest excited by Sealsfield's Transatlantische Reiseskizzen, Lebensbilder aus beiden Hemisphären, Der Virey, Land- und Seebilder, Cajutenbuch, &c., as, without the author's name, they followed each other from the press.

"His 'Transatlantic Travelling Sketches,' 'Pictures of Life in Both Hemispheres,' and 'North and South,' abound in striking and vivid delineations of life and character, and have been surpassed by no English or American writer on the like topics; while his great Mexican novel, 'The Viceroy and the Aristocracy,' is perhaps the most powerful and original of all his works. Towards 1830 he was for a short time in Paris and London, occupied with journalism. His last work appeared in 1842"—Lon. Times, June 9, 1864.

Seaman, Lazarus, D.D., a native of Leicester, Master of Peter House, Cambridge, Rector of Allhallows, London, (ejected 1662,) and subsequently one of the Westminster Assembly of Divines, d. in 1675. He pub. five single sermons, 1644-50, &c., (one of which is in Farewell Sermons, 1816, 8vo, 397,) and a treatise of Edmund Chittenden, (vide p. 378, supra), 1647, 4to. These have long been forgotten; but the name of Lazarus Seaman, as that of the owner of the first library, or one of the first libraries, in England disposed of at auction, will ever be dear to the bibliographer. Of the catalogue used on this occasion, (1676,) extracts will be found in Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 304-6, n. The folio Shakespeare of 1632 brought only 16s., (George Daniel's copy was sold in July, 1864, to Mr. Boone, for £148,) and that of 1663 only £1 8s. The whole produce amounted to £700.

Secker, Thomas, LL.D., 1693-1768, a native of Sibthorp, Nottinghamshire; educated for the Dissenting ministry at Jones's Academy at Tewksbury; preached among the Dissenters, and subsequently studied medicine; entered Exeter College, Oxford, 1721; ordained deacon, 1722; Rector of Houghton-le-Spring, 1724; Rector of St. James's, London, 1733; Bishop of Bristol, 1735; trans. to Oxford, 1737; Dean of St. Paul's, 1750; Archbishop of Canterbury, 1758. He pub. one medical work,—Disput. de Medicina Statica,—Lugd. Bat., 1721, 4to; A Letter to Horatio Walpole on Bishops in America, Lon., 1769, 8vo; and many sermons and theological treatises. His Lectures on the Catechism, Lon., 1769, 2 vols. 8vo, (last edit., 1826, 8vo; 1849, 12mo,) Charges to his Clergy, 1766, 8vo, 5th ed., 1799, 8vo, and nine volumes of sermons, 1770-90, compose the 12 vols. 8vo which constitute what is called the best edition of his works. To vol. i. of the Sermons, 1770, is prefixed the Life of the excellent author, noticed on a preceding page, (see PORTERUS, BEILBY, D.D.) Editions of his Works have also been pub.—Dubl., 1776, 6 vols. 8vo; Edin., 1792, 4 vols. 8vo; Lon., 1795, 10 vols. 8vo; 1811, 6 vols. 8vo; 1826, 6 vols. 8vo. His Family Sermons, a Selection from his Works of Sermons for every Sunday of the Year, Christmas, and Good Friday, with Life and Portrait, were pub. 1810, 2 vols. 8vo.

"When occasion calls for it, he is pathetic, animated, nervous; rises to that true sublime which consists not in pomp of diction, but in grandeur of sentiment, expressed with simplicity and strength."—BISHOP PORTERUS

"You will find nowhere, perhaps, a nobler specimen of practical preaching than is to be met with in the sermons of Archbishop Secker."—DR. HENRY OWEN

"Archbishop Secker a name never to be uttered but with reverence, as the great exemplar of metropolitan strictness, erudition, and dignity."—PURSUITS of Lit., Dial. IV., Notes, 36

"When Secker preaches, or when Murray pleads, The church is crowded, and the bar is thronged."

"A candid, wise, and practical writer, his Charges useful; superior to most in his day."—DICKERSTELL'S C. S., 4th ed., 445 See, also, 305

"He is so remarkable an instance of the laconic style that the few sermons he has published deserve an attentive reading. The Charge on Education, at Oxford, is one of the wisest I ever read, considered in the view of a philosophical Essay."—DR. DODDRIDGE

"Not a genuine specimen of the true Church of England school, . . . his theology being an odd mixture of semi-Calvinism and Dr. Waterland's new views of regeneration." &c.—ALEXANDER KNOX

"As a celebrated prelate, Secker follows Tillotson . . . Like Tillotson, also, he departed too much from primitive peculiarities of the gospel, though far preferable to most of his Episcopal contemporaries."—Dr. Williams's C. P., 6th ed., 318

"What his discourses wanted of gospel was made up by a tone of fanaticism that he still retained."—HORACE WALPOLE Memoirs of the Last Ten Years of Geo. II., i. 67 See, also, Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, and Lon. Quar. Rev., xxvii. 187.

Dr. Henry Owen, in his Advice to Candidates for Holy Orders, recommends Secker's Lectures on the Catechism as "containing a body of divinity that will stand in the place of all others."

A selection entitled Miss Sedgwick's Choice Works—viz., Clarence, Redwood, and New England Tales and Miscellanies—was pub. in 3 vols. 12mo in 1849, last ed., 1856. In 1832 she contributed the story of Le Bossu to Tales of Glauber Spa, (see SANDS, ROBERT C. ;) in 1841, prefixed a Life of Lucretia M. Davidson (also pub. in Sparks's Amer. Biog., vol. vii., and see p. 480, supra) to the Poetical Remains of that young lady; in 1843, contributed a Preface to a volume of Selections from the Writings of Mrs. Margaret M. Davidson; in 1856, wrote a Preface to The Mysterious Book, N. York, 16mo; and in 1859, an Introduction to Women and Work, by Barbara Bodichon. In her earlier days she was a contributor to The Token (see p. 700, supra) and other periodicals, and until very near to the close of life wrote for the Knickerbocker Magazine and Continental Monthly.

Everett,) lxxvi. 111; Westm. Rev., xxviii. 42, (by Harriet Martineau.) To the last-cited article the following reference is made by a late eminent jurist:

"I have read, and with exceeding pleasure, your review of Miss Sedgwick in the Westminster. It is a beautiful tribute from one who can appreciate excellence and discriminate its various developments."—Judge Story to Miss Martineau, Jan. 12, 1839. Story's Life and Letters, II. 807.

"Perhaps it is not to be wondered at that Home should be the prominent idea in Miss Sedgwick's mind throughout a literary career which has made her name dear to her country. Every novel and essay and touching story that has ever fallen from her pen—we choose our words advisedly to express the graceful ease which characterises her writings—has the thought of home, like a sweet undersong, beneath all the rich foliage of fancy and gleams of heroic feeling. Her heroines are rich in home qualities; her plots all revolve round the home centre; her hints touch gently or strongly on the sacrifices and errors that make home happy or miserable."—Mrs. KIRKLAND: Homes of American Authors, 159.

Sedley, Sir Charles, 1639-1701, a son of Sir John Sedley, of Aylesford, by Elizabeth, daughter of the famous Sir Henry Savile, Warden of Merton College, was entered Fellow Commoner of Wadham College in 1655 or 1656, and subsequently lived a country life until the Restoration, when he removed to London, and, says Wood,

"became a debauchee, set up for a satirical wit, a comedian, poet, and courtier of ladies, and I know not what, and therefore remembered by an eminent poet [the Earl of Rochester] in these verses.

'Sedley has that prevailing, gentle art,' &c.

Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iv. 730

Wood proceeds to give the unattractive particulars of that disgraceful riot by which Sedley and several of his companions were long remembered with disgust by the citizens of London. Sir Charles subsequently became a member of Parliament for New Romney, Kent. He was a warm promoter of the Revolution,—actuated, as he sarcastically professed, "from a principle of gratitude. For, since his majesty has made my daughter a Countess," he remarked, "it is fit I should do all I can to make his daughter a Queen."

"Yet Vane could tell what ills from Beauty spring,
And Sedley curst'd the form that pleased a king."

Dr. Johnson's Vanity of Human Wishes.

But there seems to have been little in the "form" to please king or commoner. Catherine Sedley herself knew not what was the attraction that had made her Countess of Dorchester. "It cannot be my beauty," she said, "for he must see that I have none, and it cannot be my wit, for he has not enough to know that I have any."

Sedley's dramatic writings are 1. The Mulberry Garden; a Comedy, Lon., 1668, '75, 4to. 2. Antony and Cleopatra, a Tragedy, altered, 1677, 4to. 3. Bellamira; or, The Mistress; a Comedy, 1687, 4to. 4. Beauty the Conqueror; or, The Death of Mark Antony; a Tragedy, 1702, 8vo. 5. The Grumbler; a Comedy, 1702, 8vo. 6. The Tyrant King of Crete; a Tragedy, 1702, 8vo. His Works, which are composed of his Plays, Poems, Songs, Speeches, and Political Pieces, were pub. in 1702, 8vo; also, 1722, 2 vols. 12mo; and, best edition, containing addits., 1778, 2 vols. 12mo. Seed, Jeremiah, a native of Clifton, Cumberland, became Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1782; was subsequently for a number of years curate to Dr. Daniel Waterland, at Twickenham, and in 1741 obtained the living of Enham, Hampshire, which he retained until his death, in 1747. His writings are contained in four volumes, pub. after his death, viz.: 1. Discourses on Several Important Subjects, to which are added Eight Sermons preached at the Lady Moyer Lecture, (1733,) Lon., 1743, 2 vols. 8vo, 1 p., r. 8vo; 1745, 2 vols. 8vo; Dublin, 1746, 2 vols. in 1, 8vo; 3d Lon. ed., 1747, 2 vols. 8vo; 1751, 2 vols. 8vo; 1757, 2 vols. 8vo; 1 p., r. 8vo; 1763, 2 vols. 8vo; 1776, 2 vols. 8vo. 2. Posthumous Works, consisting of Sermons, Letters, Essays, &c., published from the Author's Original MSS. by Joseph Hall, M.A., 1750, 2 vols. 8vo; 1 p., r. 8vo; 1751, 2 vols. 8vo; 1762, 2 vols. 8vo; 1770, 8vo; 1776, 8vo. Of the contents of the four vols., nothing was pub. in his lifetime save the Funeral Sermon on Dr. Waterland, (the last in vol. 1. of the Posthumous Works), which appeared in 1741, 4to; 2d ed., 1742, 8vo.

Selden, John, December 16, 1584–November 30, 1654, one of the most learned men whom England has produced, a native of Salvington, near Worthing, Sussex, was educated at Hart Hall, Oxford: when about nineteen, was admitted a member of Clifford's Inn, and in 1604 removed to the Inner Temple. In 1621 he was imprisoned for five weeks as the instigator of the offensive protestation of the House of Commons respecting the Rights and Privileges of the Subjects, (pub. Lon., 1642, 4to;) in the last Parliament of James I. (1623) first appeared in the House, being returned for Lancaster; in the first (1625) and second (1626) Parliaments of Charles I. sat for Great Bedwin, in the third Parliament (1628) represented Ludgershall, and was one of the nine members of this body who for their opposition to the Court were (in 1629) imprisoned in the Tower on a charge of seditious. In 1640 he took a seat, as member for the University of Oxford, in the Long Parliament, where, as during the rest of his life, he distinguished himself by his moderation, and was honoured by the respect and confidence of many members of all parties. In 1643 he was a lay member of the Assembly of Divines, took the Covenant, and was appointed by Parliament Chief Keeper of the Rolls and Records in the Tower; in 1645 was one of the twelve commoners selected to be Commissioners of the Admiralty, and was chosen, but declined the office, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge; and in 1646 he was voted £5000 for his sufferings and services during the third Parliament of Charles I. His latter years were spent and his death occurred at the Carmelite or White Fryers, the house of Elizabeth, Countess Dowager of Kent, whose estates he managed, and to whom Aubrey, a contemporary, declares he was married:

"He never owned the marriage with the countess of Kent till after her death, upon some law account. . . . He was very tall, I guesse about 6 foot high, sharpe oval face, head not very big, long nose, inclining to one side, full popping ale, (gray.) He was a poet, and Sir John Suckling brings him in the 'Session of the Poets,'" &c.—Aubrey's MSS. Brit. Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 375, (q v for an elaborate account of Selden and his writings: other authorities will be cited below.)

We proceed to an enumeration of his productions.

1. Jani Anglorum Facies Altera Libri II., Lon., 1610, 12mo; 1681, 12mo. Also in English,—The Black Face of the English Janus,—1682, fol.; again, trans., with Notes, by Redman Westcott, [Dr Adam Littleton,] in Selden's Tracts, viz.: I. ut supra; II. England's Epinomis; III. Of the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of Testaments; IV. Of the Intestate's Goods: all in 1 vol., 1683, fol.

"Exhibits traces of that accurate research and learning which in his ripper years made him one of the greatest ornaments of our constitutional literature."—2 Mart. Owe, Introd. 3

2. The Duello; or, Single Combat, 1610, 4to, 1632, 4to; 1706; 1712. The last reprint was caused by the quarrel between Duke Hamilton and Lord Mohun. Upon the subject of the duel, see Superstition and Force: Essays on The Wager of Law—The Wager of Battle—The Ordeal of Torture, by Henry C. Lea, LL.D., Phila., 1866, 12mo, pp. 147. Commended by Lon. Reader, Sept. 29, 1866, Lon. Globe, Oct. 13, 1866, N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1866, Princ. Rev., Oct. 1866, Lon. Athen., Nov. 3, 1866, Leipzig Allgemeine Deutsche Strafrechtszeitung, Feb. 1867. Dr. Lea—we are proud to claim him as a Philadelphian—has also written another work of great learning, viz: An Historical Sketch of Sacerdotal Celibacy in the Christian Church, 1867, 8vo, pp. xx., 549, Index, 571–601.

"This subject has recently been treated with very great learning and admirable impartiality by an American author, Mr Henry C. Lea, in his 'History of Sacerdotal Celibacy.' (Philadelphia, 1867,) which is certainly one of the most valuable works that America has produced. Since the great history of Dean Milman, I know no work in English which has thrown more light on the moral condition of the middle ages, and none which is more fitted to dispel the gross illusions concerning that period which positive writers, and writers of a certain ecclesiastical school, have conspired to sustain."—W E H. LOCKY, History of European Morals, from Augustus to Charlemagne, Lon., 1869, 2 vols. 8vo.

The learned author is now (1869) engaged upon a History of the Inquisition, which we doubt not will be the most valuable work upon the subject.

3. Notes and Illustrations on Drayton's Poly-Olbion, pub. in that work, 1613, fol.

"Exhibit a large portion of acumen and research, united to an equal share of discrimination and judgment."—Drake's Shipboy and his Times, i. 471.

See, also, DRAYTON, MICHAEL.

4. Titles of Honour, 1614, 4to; 2d ed., with omissions (see Bp. Nicolson's Letters, p. 541) and additions, 1631, fol; 3d and best ed., 1672, fol. Also in Latin, by Simon John Arnold, Franc., 1897.

"This book is in great esteem with lay-gentlemen."—Wood, Athen. Oxon., iii. 368.

"As to what concerns our nobility and gentry, all that come within either of those lists will allow that Mr Selden's Titles of Honour ought first to be well perused, for the gaining of a general notion of the distinction of degrees, from an emperor down to a country gentleman."—BISHOP NICOLSON, Eng. Hist. Lib., ed. 1776, 7. See, also, 166.

"A book of so much use and learning that I know none other extant in our language more befitting a gentleman and a scholar to read. . . The best book Selden ever writ."—DR J. TAYLOR Direct. for Study of Eng. Hist.

"Selden's 'Titles of Honour' a gentleman should not be without."—JOHN LOCKE Some Thoughts concerning Reading and Study

"On the curious subjects of knighthood, knights-service, nobility, arms, cry of war, banners, and tournaments, an ample fund of information may be sought in Selden's Titles of Honour. . . See our learned Selden, in his Titles of Honour."—GIBSON Decline and Fall, &c., chap. lvi., n. 171, n.

"It is a most learned treatise; but the author appears, however, to have paid more attention to the dignities of foreign countries than to those of his own."—CRUICKSHANK Dynasties, Pref. See, also, Moule's Bibl. Herald, 81, 110, 182.

5. Analecton Anglo-Britannicon Libri duo, de Civile Administratione Britannicæ Magnæ usque ad Normanni Adventum, 1615, 4to; 1653, 8vo. Praised by Degory Wheare, in his Method of Reading Civil and Ecclesiastical History. 6. Notes on Fortescue's De Laudibus Legum Angliæ and Hengham's Summæ Magna et Parva, printed with those works in 1 vol., 1616, 8vo, et seq. See FORTESCUE, SIR JOHN; HENGHAM, SIR RALPH DE, Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., 151. 7. De Dns Syris Syntagmata due, viz. de Nominibus Commentitius in V. Testamento memoratis, Lon., 1617, 12mo; ed. De Dieu et Heinsius, Lugd. Bat., apud Elsev., 1629, 12mo; et cum additamentis Andr. Beyerli, Lips., 1663; (et 1662?) 1672; editio optima, Amst., 1680, sm. 8vo. Also in vol. xxiii. of Ugoletti's Thesaurus Antiquitatum Sacrarum, which contains nearly thirty other treatises on the idols noticed in the Scriptures. The erudition displayed by Selden—but a little over thirty years of age—is marvelous.

"This was Selden's celebrated work, which placed him at once in the rank of the first scholars of the age. The primary purpose was to treat on the false gods mentioned in the Old Testament, but with which he joined an inquiry into the Syrian idolatry in general, and an occasional illustration of the ancient Theology of other Heathen nations."—DR. Aikin's Life of Selden.

"Vir . . . D. Joannes Seldenus in scripto illo de Dns Syris accuratissimo, eruditionisque reconditis comprimis feto."—GATAKER De Tetragram.

"Hoc Opus de Dns Syris aureum libellum vocat Bochart, in Geogr. Sacr."—BLOUNT Cens. Celeb. Auct., 696, (q. v.)

"De tous les ouvrages de Selden, celui à mon avis le plus agréable et le plus utile."—PAUL COLOMBES, Bibl. Chris., 197–8.

"Remark Milton's wonderful sublimity, not merely in his central figure of him who had not 'lost all his original brightness,' but who was 'not less than archangel ruined;' but in his creation, it may almost be said, out of Selden's book and the few allusions in the Old Testament, of a new Demonology . . . I owe the germ of this observation, perhaps more than the germ, to my friend Mr. [afterwards Lord] Macaulay."—MILMAN: Hist. of Lat. Christianity, viii., b. xiv., ch. ii., n.

"For the enumeration of the Syrian and Arabian deities, it may be observed that Milton has comprised in one hundred and thirty very beautiful lines the two large and learned syntagmas which Selden had composed on that abstruse subject."—GIBSON: Decline and Fall, &c., chap. xv., n.

By no means: no more than Mr. Gibbon has "comprised" a faithful picture of Christian antiquity in this and the succeeding chapter of his immortal history.

8. The History of Tithes, with a Review of it, Lon., 1618, 4to; reprinted, with the old date, 1680. This work, which denies the jure divino of tithes, reducing them to a mere taxation, and moreover handles the clergy without ceremony, was answered by Sir James Sempil, (infra), Dr. R. Tillesley, (infra), and Dr. R. (afterwards Bishop) Montagu, (supra).—Distrib. on the First Part of Selden's History of Tithes, 1621, 4to. See, also, NETTLE, STEPHEN; SCLATER, WILLIAM, D.D., No. 7. The reprint (1680) was attacked by Dr. Thomas Comber. See Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., 142; Athen. Oxon., iii. 369; Cunningham's Biog. Hist. of Eng., iii. 284. Even King James pointed out obnoxious passages in the work, and the author was cited (Dec. 1618) before the High Commission. The pressure was too strong: Selden recoiled.

"Mr Selden's History of Tithes was what most of all his works blasted his credit, and exposed him to penance as well as censure."—Bp. Nicolson's Eng. Hist. Lib., 142.

"Though often attacked, and the author compelled to make an apology for wilting it, it has never been answered. His doctrines on the subject are now, I believe, very generally received."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 394.

"A very curious volume, and, as the learned author told Evelyn, the most valuable work of this great scholar."—Disraeli's Curios of Lit.

9. Spicilegium in Eadmeri sex Libros Historiarum, 1623, fol. see EADMER.

"Which book is much commended by antiquaries and critics."—Wood Athen. Oxon., iii. 370.

10. Com ad Marmora Arundelliana, cum aliquot Inscriptionibus veteris Latini, 1628, 4to; 1629, 4to; reprinted, with additions: see PRIDEAUX, HUMPHREY, D.D., No. 1.

"Il a corrigé et déchiffré les Marbres d'Arundel avec un succès admirable, et il y a ajouté des Notes si excellentes," &c.—Jugr. des Savans à Paris, 1685, par Ballet.

"A sort of era in lapidary learning was made in 1629 by Selden's description of the marbles brought by the Earl of Arundel from Greece, and which now belong to the University of Oxford."—Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1844, li. 291.

11. De Successionibus in Bona Defuncti secundum Leges Hebræorum Lib. I., et de Successione in Pontificatum Hebræorum Lib. II., Lon., 1631, 4to; 1636, 4to, Lugd. Bat., apud Elsev., 1638, 12mo, Leyd., 1638, 8vo, by Beckmann, cum addit., by the author, Franc. ad Oder, 1673, 4to; 1695, 4to.

"These treatises display great research and discrimination, in which Selden was greatly aided by his profound legal knowledge. In the latter there is a curious table of the various bodily defects which the Jews considered excluded the subject from the priesthood."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 395.

12. Mare Clausum, seu de Dominio Maris, Libri II., Lon., 1635, fol.; 1636, 8vo. Also in English, by Marchamont Needham, (v. p. 1406, supra), 1652, fol.; the same, revised and corrected by J. H., 1663, fol. A Latin edition appeared in Holland, 12mo, but was prohibited by the king on account of some additions and a preface by Boxhornius. The work having been attacked, Selden published—13. Vindicte secundum Integritatem Existimationis sue per Convitium de Scriptione Maris Clausi petulantissimum et mendacissimum Maris Liberi, &c., Lon., 1653, 4to.

"We have already observed that Selden's Vindicte, &c. Maris Clausi was wrote against Graëwinckel's Vindicte Maris Liberi, which was levelled against Peter Burk's book adversus Petrum Baptistam Burgum, who agreed with our author in general, that the sea, as well as the earth, is subject to some states, but maintained that the dominion of the sea belonged to the Genoese."—Bras. Brit., vi. 822, CCC.

"The English dominion over the four seas, totally excluding our neighbours, both French and Dutch, from fishing therein without our license, has been fairly made out by Mr Selden in his Mare Clausum, against all the objections of H. Grotius in his Mare Liberum."—BISHOP NICOLSON: Eng. Hist. Lib., 178, n.

"He [Selden] fell far short of his great rival in the force and beauty of his argument; but he entirely surpassed him in the extent and variety of his citations and researches. . . . Sir Matthew Hale considered the title of the king to the narrow seas adjoining the coast of England to have been abundantly proved by the treatise of Selden; and Butler speaks of it [Hargr., Law Tracts, x., Co. Litt., lib. iii., n. 208] as a work of profound erudition."—1 Kent, Com. 30, 8th ed., 1854, (q. v.)

"Let him hasten to be acquainted with that noble volume written by our learned Selden, 'Of the Law of Nature and of Nations' a work more useful and more worthy to be perused by whoever studies to be a great man in wisdom, equity, and justice, than all those 'decretals and sumless sums' which the pontifical clerks have doted on, ever since that unfortunate monster famously sinned thrice, and died impenitent of her bringing into the world those maimed and mangled infants, Lombard and Gratian!"—JOHN MILTON The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, ch. xxii.

20. Fleta, seu Commentarius Juris Anglicani sive nuncupatus, sub Edwardo Rege primo seu circa Annos abhinc CCXL. ab Anonymo conscriptus: subjungitur etiam Joannis Seldeni ad Fletam Dissertatio historica, Lon., 1647, 4to; 2d ed., 1685, 4to. See KELHAM, ROBERT, No. 3. The 2d ed. of Fleta is the best; but the best contains many errors. A new ed., well annotated, would handsomely pay some lawyer's "debt to his profession." To Fleta is added an anonymous French essay, (on the Practice of the Courts,) entitled Fet Assavoir. The first of the six books was pub. separately in 1736, fol.: see CLARKE, SIR SAMUEL. It is an exposition (partly based on Glanvill and Bracton) of the English law, with the practice of the courts, the forms of writs, and the explanation of law-terms. In 1289 Edward I. imprisoned Thomas de Weyland, chief justice, and several other judges, for alleged "foul practices." One or more of these is supposed to have been incarcerated in the Fleet, (though the chronicles say they were committed to the Tower,) and enforced leisure was well employed in the production of this excellent treatise. Such is the accepted theory; and Selden (Dissert. ad Flet., cap. x.) gives substantial reasons for assigning the work to the reign of Edward I. But, on the other hand, Sir Edward Coke (Pref. to Rep., lib. 8) and Dr. Cowel (Interp., voc. Fleta) are satisfied that Fleta was composed in the latter years of Edward II. or the early years of Edward III. One of the last-printed opinions on the subject is that of a late Lord Chancellor, recently deceased:

"Fleta must have been written after the thirteenth year of the King, [Edward I.] and not much later, for it frequently quotes the statute of Westminster the second, without referring to the latter statutes of the reign. . . . Fleta and Britton, though inferior in style and arrangement to Bracton, are wonderful performances for such an age, and make the practitioners of the present day, who are bewildered in the midst of an immense legal library, envy the good fortune of their predecessors, who in a few manuscript volumes, copied by their own hand and constantly accompanying them, could speedily and clearly discover all that was known on every point that might arise."—LORD CAMPBELL Lives of the Lord Chancellors, i. chap. xi.

"This very short and small volume gives perhaps a more exalted notion of Selden's natural talents than any of his learned writings. . . . These sayings, . . . on the whole, are full of vigour, raciness, and a kind of scorn of the half-learned, far less rude, but more cutting, than that of Scaliger. It has been said that the Table-Talk of Selden is worth all the Ana of the Continent. In this I should be disposed to concur; but they are not exactly works of the same class."—*HALLAM: Lk. Oxon., iii. 375, Biog. Brit., vi. 3623, CCC,) some of which—A Vindication of the Ancient Way of Parliament in England—were pub. with Nathaniel Bacon's Historical Discourse of the Uniformity of the Government of England, (5th and best ed., 1760, 4to;) and Wood says he had a great hand in the edition of the translation (Thomas North's) of Plutarch's Lives which was pub. Camb., 1657, fol. A collective edition of his works, in three vols., bound in six vols. folio, (some 1. p.), appeared London, 1726:—Opera Omnia tam edita, quam inedita, in tribus voluminibus, collecta ac recensuit Vitam Auctoris, Prefationes et Indices adjectit David Wilkins, S.T.P., (cum effigie.) Vol. i. consists of the treatises on the Jewish history and economy; vol. ii. contains Latin tracts on history and jurisprudence, letters and poems; vol. iii. is occupied with his English works. The student is referred to The Lives of John Selden, Esq., and Archbishop Usher, with Notices of the Principal English Men of Letters with whom they were connected, by John Aikin, M.D., Lon., 1811, 8vo, 1812, 8vo, (see Fosteriana, 1838, 188,) and the article in the Biographia Britannica, (1763, vi. 3605-3624,) with the sources on which it relies, should not be neglected. Usher's Life and Letters, Works of John Greaves, Clarendon's Life, Burnet's Reformation, Lloyd's Memoirs, Blount's Cens. Celeb. Authorum, Twell's Life of Pocock, the General Dict., Chalmers's Biog. Dict., Whitelocke's Swedish Embassy, Nichols's Lit. Anec., Aubrey's Letters of Eminent Persons, 1813, 3 vols. 8vo, and Brit. Crit., vol. xli., all contain notices of this very distinguished scholar. There is also a much later work, called Memoirs of John Selden, with Notices of the Political Contest during his Time, by George W. Johnson, 1835, 8vo. This volume we have not seen the critic of the London Athenæum (1836, 286) does not seem to value it. In general, Selden's Latin style is far from happy:

"As to his writings, his style is universally condemned. Budd [Buddens] has well observed that it is a mélange of all that is bad, as well as all that is good, in the Latin language. Le Clerc complains of the trouble caused to the reader by his obscurity as well as the perplexity of his method, of which he has given a remarkable instance. We have given another in the article of Sir Henry Spelman; and a third is superadded, by a mistake, in the General Dictionary."—Biog. Brit., vi. 3624.

"His style in all his writings seems harsh, and sometimes obscure; which is not wholly to be imputed to the abstract subjects of which he commonly treated, out of the paths trod by other men, but to a little undervaluing the beauty of a style, and too much propensity to the language of antiquity; but in his conversation he was the most clear dissembler, and had the best faculty in making hard things easy and present to the understanding; of any man that hath been known."—EARL OF CLARENDON: Life.

"He was a man of very great learning, extremely well versed in the Jewish laws and antiquities; the Oriental languages were familiar to him; and the works which he has published upon the Greek antiquities demonstrate that his knowledge was as eminent in this way as in the antiquities of Scripture; but he is a negligent, obscure, and perplexed writer. He often leaves the matter in hand, and falls into digressions; and there is very little order or method in his works."—AUGUSTINE CALMET.

In his description of the mixed Assembly of divines and laymen, "like Jews and Christians in a ship together," John Cleveland thus notices our author:

"And Selden is a galliard by himself,
And well may be; there's more Divines in him
Than in all this their Jewish Sanhedrim."

To quote more testimonials to the extent of his erudition would not be difficult. Grotius calls him the glory of the English nation; and Grotius had well weighed his honoured rival:

"D. Seldeni præclara jam habuimus ex Hebræorum scriptis deprompta; quare in animo illi esse novis nos muneribus suis ditare gaudeo. De Synedrio paucæ pro materia uberitate dedit nobis Cochius. Non dubito quin D. Seldenus pro ista sua multijagi lectione plurima scita utilis ac jucunda possit velleque addere. Nec minus placeat alterum recordari eruditissimum argumentum de Jure Gentium, quale Hebræi coluere."—HUGO GROTIUS: Epist. ad Samuelum Johnson, Lutet., 30-30 Sept. 1038.

"Velix tunc erat atque beata Terra Anglia, &c."

"England was then blessed and happy when she brought forth that inexhaustible treasure of Hebrew antiquities and various erudition, in the 44th [84th] year of the last century, at Salvington. . . . Hence appear that profound knowledge in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Rabbinical, Syriac, and Arabic tongues; as also his perfect acquaintance with all parts of philosophy, and of the laws both divine and human."—THEOP. STRIEMLIUS: Lateral. Common., xxx. 908; Biog. Brit., vi. 3624, CCC.

"The most learned Mr. Selden, one of the greatest men that any age has produced."—BURNET: Hist. Reformation, book iii.

"Mr. Selden was a person whom no character can flatter, or transmit in any expressions equal to his merit and virtue. He was of such stupendous learning in all kinds and in all languages, as may appear from his excellent and transcendent writings, that a man would have thought he had been entirely conversant among books, and had never spent an hour but in reading and writing; yet his humanity, courtesy, and affability were such, that he would have been thought to have been bred in the best courts, but that his good nature, charity, and delight in doing good and in communicating all he knew exceeded that breeding."—EARL OF CLARENDON, (his intimate friend for many years.) Life.

"John Selden, unsurpassed for learning and ability in the whole splendid history of the English bar, on every book of whose library was written, 'Before every thing, Liberty!'"—CHARLES SUMNER: Speech on Our Foreign Relations, Sept. 10, 1863. See, also, ELSTON, HENRY.

Such was the great Selden: such his public services, his many virtues, his vast accomplishments. Did he place his trust, did he find his happiness, in these?—or had he learned "a more excellent way"? He shall answer for himself:

"I have taken much pains to know every thing that was esteemed worth knowing among men; but, with all my disquisitions and readings, nothing more remains with me to comfort me, at the close of life, but this passage of St. Paul, 'It is a faithful saying, worthy of all acceptance, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners.' To this I cleave, and herein I find rest!"

When he was dying, he said to Archbishop Usher,

"I have surveyed most of the learning that is among the sons of men, and my study is filled with books and manuscripts [he had 8000 volumes in his library] on various subjects; but at present I cannot recollect any passage out of all my books and papers whereon I can rest my soul, save this from the sacred Scriptures 'The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works'—[Tit. ii. 11-14]"

"In the published letters to George Selwyn we get a mass of correspondence by no means so brilliant and witty as Walpole's, or so bitter and bright as Hervey's, but as interesting, and even more descriptive of the time, because the letters are the work of many hands. You hear more voices speaking, as it were, and more natural than Horace's dandified treble and Spenser's malignant whisper."—THACKERAY, George the Third.

Serres, Olivia Wilmot, 1772-1834, wife of the preceding, and the reputed daughter of Robert Wilmot, a carpenter of Warwick, in 1815 professed to have been informed that Henry, Duke of Cumberland, brother of George III., was her father. This claim—effectually silenced in Parliament, June 18, 1823, by the exposition of Sir Robert Peel, (see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1823, i. 637)—was in 1861 revived by Mrs. Serres's daughter, Mrs. Ryves. The case was tried in June, 1866, and the jury found a verdict against the claimant. The London Times treats the case as an imposture. See, also, Hannah Lightfoot, &c., by W. J. Thoms, 1867, 8vo; Notes and Queries, 1869, i. 489, 608. As an author, Mrs. Serres has already received our notice, (see Junius, 1813, No. 29; 1817, No. 43; *Lon. Gent. Settle, Elkanah, 1648-1723-4, a native of Dunstable, Bedfordshire; entered of Trinity College, Oxford, 1666; came to London probably in the next year, and spent the rest of his life as an author and politician. He acquired some reputation by his tragedies of Cambyse, (Lon., 1671, '72, '75, '92, 4to.) Herod and Mariamne, (1673, 4to.) The Empress of Morocco, (1678, 4to.) and other dramatic pieces and poems and political pamphlets, but lost more, in the long run, by his squabbles with Dryden,—in whose life (p. 523, supra) we have already introduced "The City Poet" to the reader. The Empress of Morocco, 1673, 4to, said to be the first play in the English language which was illustrated by engravings, (see Scott's Life of Dryden), is very rare, and was priced in 1859 £2 5s. Accounts of his works and his quarrels—neither of sufficient importance to be detailed here—will be found in Athen. Oxon.; Johnson's, (see Cunningham's ed.) Malone's, and Scott's Dryden; Biog. Dramat.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.; Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Spence's Anec.; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors and Calam. of Lit. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1850, ii. 367. In the decline of life he composed drolls for a booth in Bartholomew Fair, and, in the farce of St. George for England, represented a dragon, enclosed in a case of leather of his own invention—hence Dr. Young:

"Poor Elkanah, all other changes past,
For bread in Smithfield dragons hiss'd at last,
Spit streams of fire to make the butchers gape,
And found his manners suited to his shape."

Epistle to Alexander Pope.

Subsequently he gained admission into the Charterhouse, (so graphically described by Washington Irving,) and there died. His great rival—for at one time Settle was a rival of the author of The Hind and Panther—thus takes off Settle's literary characterisation:

"Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
Made still a blundering kind of melody,
Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
Through sense and nonsense, never out nor in,
Free from all meaning, whether good or bad,
And, in one word, heroically mad."

He was the author of a number of political papers; and the Letters of Massachusettsensis, 1774-75, pp. 118, 12mo, again, N. York, 1775, 8vo, Lon., 1776, 8vo, (repub. with Novanglus, by John Adams, and Letters to Hon. William Tudor, also by John Adams, Bost., 1819, 8vo.), were until recently ascribed to him. They are now, however, attributed to Daniel Leonard, of Taunton, (see Boston Transcript, April 18, 1851.) See the Works of John Adams, 1850-56, 10 vols. 8vo; Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, i. 232, ii. 112; N. Amer. Rev., ix 376, (by F. C. Gray.)

Sewall, Jonathan, LL.D., son of the preceding, a resident of Quebec, filled the offices of Solicitor, Attorney-General, and Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court until 1808, when he was appointed Chief-Justice of the Province, which post he resigned in 1838. He died Nov. 12, 1839, in his 74th year. He was the author of a Memoir of Sir James Craig, and of An Essay on the Judicial History of France so far as it relates to the Law of the Province of Lower Canada, 1834 read before the Literary and Historical Society of Canada, 1824, and pub., Quebec, 1824, 8vo.

Sewall, William Bartlett, son of Daniel Sewall, (supra), b. at York, Maine, 1782, graduated at Harvard College, 1803, and became an eminent member of the Portland (Maine) Bar. He was the author of a Register for Maine; co-author, with Judge Bourne, of Kennebunk, of a Register of Maine for 1820; assisted his father in almanac-making; in early life was a contributor to The Pilgrim, The Prowler, The Night-Hawk, and The Torpedo; and subsequently edited The Portland Advertiser. See Willis's Law, Courts, and Lawyers of Maine, 1863, 488.

Seward, Anna, 1747-1809, a daughter of the Rev. Thomas Seward, (infra), was for many years one of the principal literary characters of the native city of the great lexicographer. Many references to this lady will be found in Boswell's Life of Johnson, (see Index to Croker's ed., 1848;) and other notices of her occur in Mrs. Elwood's Literary Ladies of England, Lockhart's Scott, Southey's Life, and Nichols's Illust. of Lit. "The book was among the most unfortunate that James Ballantyne printed, and his brother published, in deference to the personal feelings of their partner."—LOCKHART: Ibid., chap. xxi. See, also, No. 6, (extract from Lockhart.)

"She was endowed with considerable genius, and with an ample portion of that fine enthusiasm which sometimes may be taken for it; but her taste was far from good, and her numerous productions (a few excepted) are disfigured by florid ornament and elaborate magnificence."—REV. ALEXANDER DYCE. Spec. of Brit. Portesses.

"Misses Seward and Williams, and half a dozen more of these harmonious virgins, have no imagination, no novelty. Their thoughts and phrases are like their gowns,—old remnants cut and turned."—Horace Walpole to the Countess of Ossory, Nov. 4, 1776: Letters, ed. 1861, ix. 73. See, also, 134, viii. 241, 655.

"Miss Seward is affected and superfluous; but now and then she writes a good line: for example, and she can paint a natural picture."—LEXER HUNT: Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.

'And sultry silence brooded o'er the hills;'

See, also, Moir's Sketches Poet. Lit., ed. 1856, 12; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1811, ii. 154, 241; Blackw. Mag., xli. 408. Letters of Anna Seward written between the Years 1784 and 1807, 6 vols. p. 8vo. Scott did not edit this collection, as has been asserted; but he examined the MS. and struck out many passages relating to himself. See Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. xxii., where Lockhart admits that, "however affected and absurd, Miss Seward's prose is certainly far better than her verse." Bishop Percy was concerned to find in "this voluminous publication such a display of vanity, egotism, and it grieves him to add, malignity, as is scarce compensated for by the better parts of her epistles."—Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii. 427. See, also, 420.

Seymour, Aaron Crossley Hobart, of High Mount, county of Limerick, Ireland, brother of the Rev. Michael Hobart Seymour, (infra), and lineal descendant of Sir Henry Seymour, brother of the first Duke of Somerset, and Jane Seymour, third queen of Henry VIII., b. in the county of Limerick, Ireland, Dec. 19, 1789, has been for fifty years a constant contributor to periodicals, Evangel. Mag., Congreg. Mag., Wesleyan Meth. Mag., Youth's Mag., Christian Guardian, Evangel. Reg., Bentley's Miscell., &c.,—and is the author of the following volumes: 1. Vital Christianity: Letters, Lon., 1810, 12mo, 2d ed., 1819. 2. Memoirs of the Rev. George Whitefield, 1811, 8vo; Phila., 1812, 8vo. Based upon Dr. John Gillies's Life of W. 3. Seymour, Anne, Margaret, and Jane, daughters of Edward Seymour, first Duke of Somerset, (infra), are said to have composed a century of Latin distichs on the death of Margaret de Valois, Queen of France, which were trans. into French, Greek, and Italian, and printed at Paris, in 1551, under the title of Le Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois, Roynie de Navarre. Anne married, first, the Earl of Warwick, secondly, Sir Edward Hutton; the other two died single. There are reasons for doubting the authorship ascribed to these ladies: compare Ballard's Memoirs, 140, and Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors, i. 293-4.

Seymour, Michael Hobart, brother of Aaron Crossley Hobart Seymour, (supra), and also a native of Ireland, after graduating at Trinity College, Dublin, held several curacies in Ireland, where he became very unpopular in consequence of his attacks upon the dogmas and practices of the Church of Rome. Removing to England, he officiated for several years as Evening Lecturer at St. George the Martyr, Southwark, and Afternoon Lecturer at St. Ann's, Blackfriars. After his marriage with Maria, Baroness Brounmill, he removed to Bath, where he has since resided, without any preferment. A notice of Mr. Seymour as a preacher will be found in Grant's Metropolitan Pulpit, i. 266-81. As an author, the following is his record: 1. A Pilgrimage to Rome, Lon., 1848, 8vo, 4th ed., 1851. Shadwell, Thomas, b. 1640, in Norfolk, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, entered at the Middle Temple, but soon deserted law for the drama: in 1668 acquired fame by his comedy of the Sullen Lovers; in 1688 was made Poet-Laureate, and in 1692 was cut off by an over-dose of opium. His publications (all, save the last, in 4to) are: 1. Sullen Lovers, Com., Lon., 1668, '70, '93. 2. Royal Shepherdess; Tragi-Com., 1669, '91. 3. Humourists, Com., 1671. 4. Miser; Com., 1672, '91. 5. Epsom Wells, Com., 1673, '76, 1704. 6. Psyche; Trag., 1675, '90. 7. Libertine, Trag., 1676, 1704, '5. "It was in the last drama of Shadwell that the hypocrisy and knavery of these quackeries were for the first time exposed to public ridicule."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. chap. xix., (q. v. for quotations)

22. Ode to the King, fol. A collective edition of his Dramatic Works was pub. 1720, 4 vols. 12mo. But to the majority of readers Shadwell is known less by these twenty-odd publications than by his involuntary eminence as the hero of Dryden's MacFlecknoe and the original of his Og. (vide DRYDEN, JOHN, pp. 523-24, supra.)

"In prose and verse was own'd without dispute
Through all the realms of Nonsense absolute."

Nature in dulness from his tender years,
Shadwell & Jones, of all my sons, is he
Who stunts the confidant in full stupidity:
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense."—Mac Flecknoe.

Rochester is more just:

"Of all our modern wits, none seem to me
Once to have touched upon true comedy,
But hasty Shadwell and slow Wycherley
Shadwell's unfinished works do yet impart
Great proofs of nature's force, though none of art."

A Session of Poets.

Yet Rochester himself observed that "if Shadwell had burnt all he wrote, and printed all he spoke, he would have had more wit and humour than any other poet."

"Shadwell, and Etherege, and the famous Afra Behn, have endeavoured to make the stage as grossly immoral as their talents permitted; but the two former, especially Shadwell, are not destitute of humour"—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, III 525 See, also, 484

editors of the "Cambridge Shakespeare," (W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright,) announces that in the preparation of his Genealogical Notices of the Shakespeare and Arden families he has found the link which unites Shakespeare with the Ardens of Warwickshire. It is presumed that William was a student at the free school of Stratford, and after leaving this academy he seems to have acted as assistant to his father. What other occupation he found, we know not: Aubrey calls him a schoolmaster; Malone, a lawyer's clerk; Rowe, a wool-stapler or butcher. Whatever may have been his profession, its duties were not so engrossing as to exclude all thoughts of the tender passion which he has so well portrayed, for when he was eighteen years and a half old he was married to Anne Hathaway, of the hamlet of Shottery, parish of Stratford, then in her twenty-sixth year. In the absence of all contemporaneous or later evidence on the subject, Mr. De Quincey (life of Shakespeare, in Encyc. Brit.) is so kind as to favour us with a circumstantial account of the courtship, which makes the lady the suitor, and an anxious suitor.

In 1586 or 1587, as is supposed, he left Stratford for London,—whether driven from home for meddling with Sir Thomas Lucy's deer, or otherwise, is vehemently contested by antiquaries. In 1589 he was a joint proprietor in the Blackfriars Theatre, before 1592 he was well known as an actor and as a playwright; and in 1593 he published his poem of Venus and Adonis, which he thus dedicates to Lord Southampton:

"I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden, only if your honour seems but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content, which I wish may always answer your own and the world's hopeful expectation."

The modest apprehensions of the author proved to be unfounded: the "land" was most fertile, the harvest luxuriant. Lucrece—to continue the enumeration of his poems—was published in 1594; The Passionate Pilgrim, in 1599; the Sonnets, in 1609. As regards the dates of the composition of his plays, much diversity of opinion exists. We give three tables, on the authority of as many eminent critics:

Drake rejects what, he remarks, "has very improperly, in modern times, been ascribed to Shakespeare as the First Part of his King Henry the Sixth. The spuriousness of this part, indeed, has been so satisfactorily proved by Mr. Malone that no doubt can be supposed any longer to rest on the subject," (Shaksp. and his Times, ii. 292;) and he admits Pericles. Of course he rejects Titus An- droneus. But this, as well as Pericles, is included in the editions of Shakespeare Plays; making, with the thirty-five in Malone's and Chalmers's lists, thirty-seven in all.

"It is generally believed that he had much to do with the tragedy of Pericles, which is now printed among his works, and which external testimony—though we should not rely too much on that as to Shakespeare—has assigned to him, but the play is full of evident marks of an inferior hand. Its date is unknown. Drake supposes it to have been his earliest work, [1590,] rather from its inferiority than on any other ground. Titus Andronicus is now by common consent denied to be in any sense a production of Shakespeare, very few passages, I should think not one, resemble his manner."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, vol. II. chap. vi., (q. v.)

"The external evidence that Titus Andronicus was written by Shakespeare is decisive, it is printed in the folio collection, which does not contain one other doubtful play; it is enumerated by Meres, in 1598, as a play of Shakespeare's; Pericles is not printed in the folio collection, and is not mentioned by Meres; but others of Shakespeare's contemporaries attributed it to him. The internal evidence, in many respects, is against Titus Andronicus being the work of our Poet, the same species of evidence, in many respects, will assign Pericles to him. This is a question which has received much careful examination, and which requires much more."—CHARLES KNIGHT: Postscript to vol. vi. of his Pictorial ed. of Shakespeare, Dec. 21, 1841.

"Meres was personally acquainted with the poet, and so very intimately that the latter read over to him his sonnets before they were printed. I cannot conceive that all the critical sceptics in the world would ever be able to get over such a testimony."—Schlegel's Dramat. Lit., Lect. XXVI.

The researches of recent investigators exhibit plausible hypotheses which dispute, in some cases well-sustained evidence which disproves, some of the dates in the preceding table, (see remarks upon the chronology of the plays, in Edin. Rev., July, 1840, 474-76,) but a critical examination of a subject of such uncertainty and vast extent will be readily excused by the general reader.

The Seven Doubtful Plays of Shakespeare, so called, are: I. Pericles, 1609, 4to. II. Loonine, 1595, 4to, (Heber, Pt. 2, 5487, £11 11s., bought by G. Daniel, and sold at his sale, July, 1864, £103 19s., Earl of Charlemont, Aug. 1865, 151, wanting one leaf, £33 10s.) III. Sir John Oldcastle, 1600, 4to. IV. Thomas Lord Cromwell, 1602, 4to, (ed. of 1613, 4to, Earl of Charlemont, 153, £9 9s.) V. The London Prodigal, 1605, 4to, (Earl of Charlemont, 141, £13 5s.) VI. The Puritan, 1607, 4to. VII. A Yorkshire Tragedy, 1608, 4to. These, with Additional Observations, and the Genuine Poems of Shakespeare, were published together, with Notes by the Editor [Edmund Malone] and others, in 2 vols. 8vo, in 1780, as a Supplement to the 2d edition of Johnson and Steevens's edition of Shakespeare's Plays, 1778, 10 vols. 8vo. Arden of Feversham, 1592, 4to, Edward the Third, 1596, 4to, and other plays, have also been ascribed to Shakespeare; and the Two Noble Kinsmen, 1634, 4to, bears the names of John Fletcher and William Shakespeare; and The Birth of Merlin, printed 1662, is ascribed in the title-page to William Shakespeare and William Rowley. A number of other plays, &c., which need not be particularly noticed, have sought the protection of the same great name. Mr. William Gilmore Simms, of South Carolina, published in one volume, 8vo, New York, 1848, A Supplement to the Plays of Shakespeare, comprising the Seven Dramas which have been ascribed to his pen, but which are not included with his Writings in Modern Editions; edited, with Notes and an Introduction to each Play. See, also, Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 8, 1863, 2302, (Spurious or Doubtful Plays, &c.)

It is supposed that Shakespeare ceased to act upon the stage after 1603, in which year he was a performer in one of Ben Jonson's plays. In 1605 he purchased a moiety of the tithes of Stratford, and the few last years of his life were spent in the handsomest house (New Place) of that beautiful town; where, says Rowe, "his pleasurable wit and good nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship, of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood." (Reed's Shaksp., i. 74-76.)

"Every one agrees that during the last three or four years of his life Shakespeare ceased to write. Yet we venture to think that every one is in error. The opinion is founded upon a belief that he only finally left London towards the close of 1613. We have shown, from his purchase of a large house at Stratford, his constant acquisition of landed property there, his active engagements in the business of agriculture, the interest which he took in matters connected with his property in which his neighbours had a common interest, that he must have partially left London before this period. There were no circumstances, as far as we can collect, to have prevented him finally leaving London several years before 1613. . . . When the days of leisure arrived, it is not assest to believe that the mere habit of his life would not assert its ordinary control,—that the greatest of intellects would suddenly sink to the condition of an every-day man."

man, cherishing no high plans for the future, looking back with a desire to equal and excel the work of the past? . . . The marvellous accuracy, the real substantial learning, of the three Roman plays of Shakspeare, present the most complete evidence to our minds that they were the result of a profound study of the whole range of Roman history, including the nicest details of Roman manners, not in those days to be acquired in a compendious form, but to be brought out by diligent reading alone. It is pleasant to believe that the last years of Shakspeare's life were those of an earnest student. We confidently ask if the belief be not a reasonable one?—CHARLES KNIGHT: William Shakspeare: a Biography, ed. 1851, 806, 806, 807.

He died on the 23d of April, 1616,—as is supposed, his 53d birthday,—and on the 25th was buried on the north side of the chancel of the great church of Stratford.

"Whatever was the immediate cause of his last illness, we may well believe that the closing scene was full of tranquillity and hope; and that he who had sought, perhaps more than any other man, to look beyond the material and finite things of the world, should rest at last in the peace which passeth all understanding,—in that assured belief which the opening of his will has expressed with far more than formal solemnity 'I commend my soul into the hands of God my Creator, hoping and assuredly believing, through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting.'—CHARLES KNIGHT: ubi supra, 317.

"Mr. Landor, with a generous away of blood, has written a letter to the newspapers on a sin under which the nation is said to lie,—the sin of ingratitude. A descendant of Shakspeare alive and starving! To the rescue, for very shame! Such is the wacry of the generous sage of Bath. But Mr. Landor's emotions are of that lively kind which cannot wait the calm justification of facts. Little as we know of Shakspeare, we know with absolute certainty that he has no descendant now alive. Mr. J. O. Halliwell has put the circumstances conveniently together in an answer to the cry for new subscriptions. 'At Shakspeare's death in 1616 his family consisted of his wife, his daughter Susanna, married to Dr. Hall, his daughter Judith, married to Thomas Quiney, and Elizabeth Hall, a granddaughter, the only child of Susanna Shakspeare. Judith Quiney had several children, who were all dead as early as the year 1639, leaving no issue, she herself surviving till 1662. The poet's granddaughter, Elizabeth Hall, was married in 1626 to Thomas Nash, who died in 1647 without issue, and secondly, in 1649, to John Barnard, afterwards Sir John Barnard, of Abington, county of Northampton, by whom she had no family. Lady Barnard died in 1670, leaving no children, so that with her the lineal descent from Shakspeare expired. There may, however, be descendants from the Shakspeare family still living, deriving their genealogy from Joan, the poet's sister, who married William Hart of Stratford. Joan and her sons are kindly mentioned in the poet's will. The pedigree is not complete, and there is only a descent from the second son, Thomas, to whose son Thomas, with a remainder to his brother George, the birthplace and adjoining premises at Stratford were bequeathed by Lady Barnard in 1669. These continued in the possession of the family for upwards of a century. About fifty years ago the Harts removed to Tewkesbury, where, in 1848, resided Thomas Shakspeare Hart, the eighth in descent from the sister of the great dramatist.' Some years ago we saw these Harts at their house near Tewkesbury. They were very poor. The descendant of Joan Shakspeare was a rush-chair mender. If Mr. Landor pleases to get up subscriptions for the rush-worker, no one can object. Charity might flow into worse channels. Mr. Howitt claims to have discovered another descendant of Joan Shakspeare; but where are the proofs?—Athenæum, 1857, 822.

We learn, from a volume published in the year in which we write,—Shakspeareana Genealogica, Compiled by G. R. French, Lon., 1869, 8vo,—that George Hart, the ninth in descent from William Hart, who in 1599 married the poet's sister Joan Shakspeare, emigrated to Australia in 1864. The name Shakspeare frequently occurs in the Hart family.

Mr. Southey had set Mr. Landor as example of his loose way of writing:

"The descendants of Shakspeare are living in poverty, and in the lowest condition of life"—Southey's Colloquies, II 312.

But let us take a look at Howitt's "descendant of Joan Shakspeare:"

"As I went to Shrotry I met with a little incident which interested me greatly by its unexpectedness. As I was about to pass over a stile, at the end of Stratford, into the fields leading to that village, I saw the master of the national school mustering his scholars to their tasks. I stopped, being pleased with the look of the old man, and said, 'You seem to have a considerable number of lads here; shall you raise another Shakspeare from among them, think you?' 'Why,' replied the master, 'I have a Shakspeare now in the school.' I knew that Shakspeare had no descendants beyond the second generation, and I was not aware that there was any of his family remaining. But it seems that the posterity of his sister, Joan Hart, who is mentioned in his will, yet exists; part under her marriage-name of Hart, at Tewkesbury, and a family in Stratford, of the name of Smith.

"I have a Shakspeare here," said the master, with evident pride and pleasure. "Here, boys, here!" He quickly mustered his laddish troop in a row, and said to me, "There now, sir, can you tell which is a Shakspeare?" I glanced my eye along the line, and, instantly fixing it on one boy, said, "That is the Shakspeare." "You are right," said the master, "that is the Shakspeare; the Shakspeare and f countenance is the e. That is William Shakspeare Smith, a lineal descendant of the poet's sister." . . . It sounded oddly enough, as I was passing along the street in the evening, to hear some of the same school-boys say to one another, "That is the gentleman who gave Bill Shakspeare sixpence."—HOWITT: Visits to Remarkable Places, I. 96-108, and republ., with additions, in his Homes and Haunts, I. See Athen., 1857, 856.

We may refer, in passing, to notices of Shakspeare's residences in Stratford, in Athen., 1857, 501, 1860, II. 73, 1861, I. 432, 467, 561, II. 446, 511, 545, 619, 729, 845, 1862, I. 465, II. 612, 1863, I. 393, Harper's New Mon. Mag., Sept. 1861, Lon. Reader, 1863, I. 257, and Amer. Pub. Circ., 1863, I. 395. (See, also, SHAKESPEARE, JOHN, supra;) of the Stratford Bust, in Athen., 1860, I. 21, 1861, I. 562, 605, and in Wivell's Account, 1827, 8vo; of the Chandos Portrait, (purchased at the Duke of Buckingham's sale at Stowe, Sept. 14, 1848, for 355 guineas, by the Earl of Ellesmere, and by him given to the British National Gallery of Portraits,) in Athen., 1848, 937, 1033, American Pub. Circular, 1858, 274, and in Shakspeare Society Publications, No. 42, (see, also, Cousins's engraving of the Chandos Portrait, folio.) More detailed accounts of these objects of interest to the Shakspeare student will be found in several of the works enumerated in our catalogue of SHAKESPEARIANA, (infra.)

In May, 1838, a copy of Florio's translation of Montaigne's Essays, 1603, fol., with an autograph of "Shakspeare," (see Sir F. Madden's Essay, 1838, 8vo, above referred to,) was sold by Evans, of London, for £100, in June, 1858, an autograph signature of Shakspeare affixed to a mortgage-deed of a house in Blackfriars, dated March 11, 1612-13, was bought for the British Museum for £315, (see Athen., 1858, I. 788;) and within the last few years (i.e. on April 23, 1861) New Place, Stratford, was withdrawn from public sale, the price being limited to £1800, after a bid of £1100. Mr. Halliwell considers the property worth not far short of £1500 as an investment. (See Athen., 1861, I. 562.) The Garrick Shakspeare Cup was recently sold for about £50, and has been resold, it is affirmed, for £100. The enthusiasm for all that appertains to the great bard is largely shared in by Americans; yet we are compelled to admit that a reference to the Gazetteer confirms a statement which somewhat surprised us in Mr. Bartlett's Dictionary of Americanisms:

"Distinguished men in English history, as Milton, Addison, Clarendon, Dryden, Scott, Byron, Chesterfield, Hume, Marlborough, Junius, have towns christened with their names. But little fondness is exhibited for dramatic authors, as the name of the greatest of them all has been forgotten not even a pond, a hollow, or a swamp has been honored with the name of Shakspeare"—Introduc., xxi.

The large sale of the poet's works in the United States, however, is perhaps a more honourable tribute to his genius than the adoption of his name for a village. But, now that Mr. Bartlett has called attention to this omission, we predict that it will soon be supplied. We now proceed to notice—

I. EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.

II. CRITICAL OPINIONS ON SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.

III. SHAKESPEARIANA.

It is not, of course, intended to specify all of the EDITIONS, to cite all the CRITICAL OPINIONS, or to chronicle all of the SHAKESPEARIANA. For so extensive an exhibition neither our time nor our limits would suffice. In each of the divisions, where no place of publication is designated, London will be understood. P. p., or p. p., signifies privately printed; s. a., sine anno; s. l., sine loco; f. p., fine paper; t. p., thick paper; l. p., large paper. Titles will be abbreviated as convenience may suggest. We shall avail ourselves of the labours of our predecessors—Lowndes, Wilson, Halliwell, H. G. Bohn, (Lowndes's Bibl. Man., Pt. 8, 1863,) and others—as we may deem expedient; but we shall also add much new matter not before collected.

I. EDITIONS OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.

POEMS.

VENUS AND ADONIS: 1. Lon., 1593, 4to. A copy, thought to be unique, is in the Malone Collection, Bodleian Library; cost Malone £25. Reproduced in fac-simile, by E. W. Ashbee, for J. O. Halliwell, 2. 1594, 4to. Jolley, (out close and mended,) in 1844, £116; now in the Grenville Collection; Daniel, July, 1864, 1453, £240. 3. 1596, sm. 8vo. Bolland, £91; resold, Bright, £91 10s.; resold, Daniel, 1455, £350. 4. 1599. Unique. Discovered by Mr. Edmonds (of Willis & Sotheran) at the house of Sir Charles Isham, Nov. 1867; see London Bookseller, Dec. 31, 1867, 1254, Jan. 4, 1869, 6. 5. 1600, sm. 8vo. 6. 1602, 16mo. A copy bought by G. Steevens in 1790 for 84. was purchased by G. Daniel for £40. He parted with it to the British Museum. 7. 1616. So says Mr. Dyce. "He is the only authority for it."—Bohn's Loxdres, 2305.

8. 1617, 12mo. 9. 1620, 18mo. 10. Edin., 1627, sm. 8vo. Bright, £35; resold, G. Chalmers, £37 10s.; now in the British Museum. A copy was sold by Sotheby, W. & H., London, Mar. 21, 1864, for £115. 11. Lon., 1630, sm. 8vo. 12. 1636, 32mo. Sotheby, May, 1856, £49 10s.; resold, Sotheby, Aug. 1857, £56. 13. 1675, 8vo. Nassau, Pt. 2, 447.

LUCRECE. 1. 1594, 4to. Sir Wm. Bolland, £105; G. Daniel, July, 1864, 1451, £157 10s. 2. 1598, 18mo. 3. 1600, 24mo. 4. 1607, sm. 8vo. 5. 1616, 8vo. 6. 1624, 16mo. Bindley, £9. 7. 1632, 12mo. 8. With portrait, 1655, 12mo. J. Lilly's Cat., 1869, 118, £6 6s. Malone states that he had heard of editions in 1596 and 1620; and we have seen a notice of an edition of 1620, 12mo.

COLLECTED POEMS: 1. The Passionate Pilgrim, &c., some not S.'s, 1599, 16mo. Mr. J. P. Collier's last recorded opinion (see Lon. Athen., May 17, and Notes and Queries, July 5, 1856, and his Bibl. Account of Early English Lit., 1865, art. Barnfield, Richard) is that As it Fell upon a Day, If Music and Sweet Poetry Agree, and Whilst as Fiekie Fortune Smiled, which appear in this volume, are really Shakespeare's, and not Barnfield's. Mr. Knight, in his Pictorial Shakspeare, edition 1867, vi. 507, decides that the sonnet commencing If Music and Sweet Poetry Agree is Barnfield's. 3d ed., 1612, 16mo. 2. With portrait, Poems, 1640, 12mo. Sold in 1864 for £20, and in 1865 for £17 10s., G. Daniel, £44. Chiefly translations not S.'s: see No. 1. Sykes, £7; Singer, Pt. 3, with the dated title only, £20. 3. (1709), sm. 8vo "full of errors." (Malone.) 4. 1710, 2 vols. in 1, 8vo. 5. 1723, 4to. Accompanies Pope's ed. of S.'s Plays. 6. 1728, 12mo. 7. Dublin, 1771, 12mo. 8. 1774, 12mo; some 1 p. 9. (1775), sm. 8vo. 10. In English and German, Halle, 1783, 8vo. 11. With Life and Criticisms, in German, by Von Eschenberg, Zurich, 1787, 8vo. 12. Lon., 1797, 18mo; 1800, 18mo. 13. Dove, s. a., 12mo. 14. With a Glossary, Robinson, 1797, r. 8vo. Being vol. vii. of his ed. of the Plays. 15. With Capell's History, &c., and Glossary, (1798,) 8vo. 16. With Remarks by W. C. Oulton, 1804, 2 vols. 12mo. 17. With Life, 1821, 12mo. 18. With Glossarial Notes by A. J. Valpy, Lon., 1862, fp. 8vo. The Poems are also printed with some of the editions of the Plays, (infra).

"About the excellence of these poems there can be no dispute. Next to the dramas they are by far the most valuable of his works. They contain such a quantity of profound thought as must astonish every reflecting reader; they are adorned by splendid and delicate imagery; they are sublime, pathetic, tender, or sweetly playful, while they delight the ear by their fluency and their varied harmonies of rhythm. Our language can boast no sonnets altogether worthy of being placed by the side of Shakespeare's, except the few which Milton poured forth, so severe and so majestic."—REV. A. DYCE L's of Shakespeare.

"Scorn not the Sonnet critic, you have frowned Mindless of its just honours. With this key Shakespeare unlocked his heart."—WORDSWORTH.

"There is extant a small volume of miscellaneous poems in which Shakespeare expresses his feelings in his own person. It is not difficult to conceive that the editor, George Steevens, should have been insensible to the beauties of one portion of the writings of this poet where is found, in an equal compass, a greater number of exquisite feelings felicitously expressed. But, from regard to the critic's own credit, he would not have ventured to talk of an Act of Parliament not being strong enough to compel the perusal of these, or any production of Shakespeare, if he had not known that the people of England were ignorant of the treasures contained in those little pieces."—WORDSWORTH. Ref. to Poetical Works.

"Notwithstanding the frequent beauties of these sonnets, . . . it is impossible not to wish that Shakespeare had not written them."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part III. chap. v. (q. v.)

SONNETS. 1. Shakespeare's Sonnets. Never before Imprinted, 1609, 4to. Steevens, 1859, £3 19s.; Chalmers, 1842, £105, (bought for the Earl of Ellesmere;) Varel copy sold at auction in England, about 1857, £150; G.

Daniel, Dec. 1864, 1456, £225 15s. This copy cost Nassau Luttrell one shilling. Reproduced in Fac-Simile by the New Process of Photo-Zincography, (under the direction of Col. Sir Henry James, at Southampton,) from the Original in the Possession of the Earl of Ellesmere, 1862, sm. 4to, 10s. 6d. 2. 1599, 12mo. 3. With his Minor Poems and the Songs from his Plays, Whitehaven, 1822, 8vo. 4. With Milton's Sonnets, Lon., 1830, fp. 8vo; 1841, 18mo. 5. Shakespeare's Sonnets, 1839, r. 32mo. 6. The Sonnets of Shakespeare Rearranged and Divided into Four Parts, &c., 1859, p. 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 699; 1862, i. 155. 7. His Songs and Sonnets, Illustrated by John Gilbert, Dec. 1861, fp. 4to, 42s., and a Selection, Dec. 1862, 8vo, 7s. 6d. 8. The Sonnets, Bost., Dec. 1864, sm. 4to. 9. Remarks on the Sonnets of Shakespeare, with the Sonnets; showing that they belong to the Hermetic Class of Writings, &c., (by E. A. Hitchcock, supra), N. York, 1865, cr. 8vo; 1867. 10. His Songs and Sonnets, edited by F. T. Palgrave, Lon., Dec. 1865, 16mo. 11. Shakespeare's Sonnets never before Interpreted; his Private Friends Identified, together with a Recovered Likeness of Himself, by Gerald Massey, 1866, pp. 600. 12. The Sonnets of Shakespeare, by Thomas D. Budd, with Notes, Phila., 1868, sm. 4to. See, also, BROWN, CHARLES ARMITAGE, (add 1838, p. 8vo.) 13. In German, by K. Lachmann, Leipzig, 1820, 16mo; Berlin, 1820, 12mo. 14. In German, by F. Bodenstedt, 1862, 8vo; 1862, 16mo. 15. Sonette, &c., Proben einer Uebersetzung von L. Tieck, Penelope, 1828, und Schriften. 16. In French, Poemes et Sonnets, par E. Lafont, Paris, 1856, 8vo. 17. In French, Les Sonnets, traduits pour la première fois entier par F. Victor Hugo, 1857, 12mo. 18. In French, Les Sonnets, par L. de Wailly: Revue des Deux Mondes, 3me série, tome iv. Translations of the Poems are also contained in the editions of Œuvres Complètes. See A Key to Shakespeare's Sonnets, by N. Barnstorf, [Bremen, 1861;] Translated from the German by T. J. Graham, Lon., 1862, p. 8vo. Herr B. supposes "W. H." to signify William Himself, which gives to the expostulations, adulations, &c. rather a curious aspect. See Lon. Athen., 1861, i. 720, 1862, ii. 137, and 1862, i. 117, (see, also, 155, and year 1857), for a letter on the mysterious W. H., from M. Philàrète Chasles, with which compare The Sonnets of William Shakespeare: a Critical Disquisition suggested by a Recent Discovery, by Bolton Corney, 1862, 8vo, pp. 16: privately printed. M. Chasles promises a work in English, French, and German, (London, Paris, Berlin,) which will probably be entitled Shakespeare, Southampton, and Pembroke. See Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1864, Art. v., (Shakespeare and his Sonnets.)

The Sonnets were reprinted with Twenty of the Plays of Shakespeare, by George Steevens, 1766, 4 vols 8vo, and are appended to some of the later editions of the Plays, (infra).

Rev., 8d Ser., i. 91; Description of a Copy of the First Folio Edition of the Plays of Shakespeare, now in the Collection of T. P. Barton, N. York, 1860, 4to, i. p., pp. 22: 20 copies p. p.: Shakespeare's Plays in Folio, (in the library of James Lenox, Esq., the author of the account:) Appendix to Hist. Mag., July, 1861, pp. 1-5.

"The first edition is the only one, in my opinion, worth regarding, and it is much to be wished that an edition of Shakespeare were given literatim according to the first folio, for by the presumptuous license of the dwarfish commentators, who are forever cutting him down to their own size, we risk the loss of Shakespeare's genuine text, which that folio assuredly contains."—J. HORNE TOOKER Diversions of Purley.

"It is by courtesy alone that this folio can be termed an edition. Edited, in any proper sense of the word, it is not. The errors of the printer, and the corruptions of the players, are put down to Shakespeare's account; nor is there probably any Latin or Greek manuscript more vitiated by sleepy and ignorant copyists than this editio princeps has been by its publishers. . . . And this negligence is the more inexcusable and provoking because, according to general tradition, Shakespeare's autographs were models of calligraphy, and Heninge and Condell must have seen, and might therefore have printed from, them. . . . Had as the editing was, the printing of this volume was no better. Verse is printed as prose, prose as verse. Priscian's head is perpetually broken, words are omitted or transposed, the punctuation is such that had Dogberry and Verges turned compositors for the nonce, they could hardly have made it worse. Nor was advantage taken of a second edition to amend these gross, open, and palpable errors. Some glaring blunders are corrected in the second folio, but new blunders compensate for those which are removed."—Bentley's Lon. Quarterly, No. III. See, also, Cornhill Mag., Oct. 1867.

The 100 engravings were also bound and sold separately as Boydell's Graphic Illustrations of the Dramatic Works of Shakespeare, &c., 1802, &c., r. fol., £10 10s; Proofs, with 85 etchings, (being all that were taken off,) £21. These are distinguished as the small set, and are not duplicates of the large. See Dibdin's Bibliog. Decameron, ii. 383. An additional set of 100 engravings,—intended to accompany the large set,—from designs by Fuseli, Northcote, Opie, Hamilton, and Stothard, was issued by the Boydells in 1802-3, 2 vols. atlas fol., £63. There should be 100 plates exclusive of "Shakespeare Nursed by Tragedy and Comedy." Roxburgh, 3798, proofs and 98 (all that were taken) etchings, Rus., £81; Stowe, proofs before letters, mor., £42 10s., Hanrott, 2737, proofs, 2 vols., green mor., £40; Stowe, proofs before letters, and 98 etchings, Miss Boydell's copy, £42 10s. For an account of Lady Lucan's illustrated copy, see Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 498, n. In 1804, the year of his death, Boydell estimated his expenditures on these great works at £350,000, which ruined him. In 1777 he published the Liber Veritatis, fol., in 1794, the History of the River Thames, 2 vols. fol.; and in 1803, an Alphabetical Catalogue of Plates Engraved by the First Artists, &c., 4to. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1804, 1805; Knight's Eng. Cyc. Biog., i. 1856, 878.

Mr. Tassie was more fortunate: he drew the Boydell Gallery with a guinea lottery-ticket, and profited by it, it is said, to the extent of more than £10,000. Dr. Spooner, of the city of New York, only a few years since restored the plates, and reissued engravings, 100 in number, at $1 each. See SPOONER, SHEKALJANUT, M.D.

II. CRITICAL OPINIONS ON SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS.

But where shall we begin the harvest? for the field is vast, the fruit abundant, the garner small,—and we cannot, like the rich man in the parable, "pull down our barns and build greater."

The abundance of modern commentaries on the great bard will not justify us in neglecting the earlier discerners of his merits,—including, as these do, some of the foremost names in the English Republic of Letters.

The following lines, published in Shakspeare's twenty-eighth year, form part of a lamentation over the perversion of public taste:

"And he, the man whom Nature selfe had made
To mock herselfe, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under mimic shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late:
With whom all joy and jolly merriment
Is also deaded and in dolour drent"

EDMUND SPENSER. The Teares of the Muses' Complaints, 1591, 4to. See, also, his Colin Clout's Come Home Again, 1596, 4to.

It has been doubted—with good reason, we think—that the lines just quoted were intended for Shakspeare: but see Collier's Life of the poet, 1844; Knight's William Shakspeare: a Biography, ed. 1843, and ed. 1851, 207-8, and his Pictorial Shakspeare, ed. 1867, viii. 350-52; and Staunton's Shakspeare, Life, xxvii.

Robert Greene warns his fellow-bards against the ingratitude and selfishness of players:

"Trust them not," he exclaims: "there is an upstart Crowe beautified with our feathers, that with his Tygres heart, wrapt in a Player's hyde, supposes he is as well able to bombast out a Blanke Verse, as the best of you:—and being an absolute Johannes fac-totum is, in his own conceyt, the onely Shake-scene in a Countrey."—Groatworth of Witte bought with a Million of Ropes pendance, 1592, 4to. Published by Henry Chettle: see his Kindes Hart's Dreame, (1593,) 4to, address To the Gentleman Reader. "As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to live in Pythagoras: so the sweete wittie soule of Quintus lives in mellifluous and hony-tongued Shakspeare, witness his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred Sonnets among his private friends. . . . As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latines: so Shakspeare among ye English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for Comedy witness his Gillem of Verona, his Errors, his Loves labors lost, his Loves labours wonne, his Midsommers night dreame, & his Merchant of Venice; for Tragedy, his Richard the 2., Richard the 3., Henry the 4., King John, Titus Andronicus and his Romeo and Juliet.

"As Epilus Solo said, the Muses would speak with Plautus tongue, if they would speak Latin: so I say the Muses would speak with Shakspeare's fine filed phrase, if they would speak English."—FRANCIS MERES. Wits Treasury, being the second part of Wits Commonwealth, 1598, 12mo.

"And Shakspeare, thou whose hony-flowing vaine (Pleasing the world) thy praises doth obtaine, Whose Venus and whose Lucrece (sweete and chaste)
Thy name in fame's immortal booke have plac't,
Live ever you; at least, in fame live ever!
Well may the hodie die, but fame dies never!"

"Like friendly Shakspeare's tragedies, where the comedian rides while the tragedian stands on tiptoe: faith it should please all, like Prince Hamlet; but in sadness then it would be feared he would runne mad."—ANTHONY SCOLOKER. Asphautus, 1604 4to

TO OUR ENGLISH TERENCE, MR WILLIAM SHAKSPEARE.

"Some say, good Will, which I in sport do sing,
Hadst thou not plaid some Kingly parts in sport,
Thou hadst been a companion for a King,
And beene King among the meaner sort.

Some others raille; but raille as they think fit,
Thou hast no rayling, but a raising writ
And honestly thou sow'st, which they do reape,
So to increase their stocke, which they do keepe."

AN EPILOGUE TO THE ADMIRABLE DRAMATICK POET, SHAKSPEARE

"What needs my Shakspeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an Age in piled stones,
Or that his hallow'd Reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Dear Sonne of Memory, great Heire of Fame,
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy Name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyselfe a lasting Monument:
For whilst, to th' shame of slow-endeavouring Art,
Thy easie numbers flow, and that each part [heart]
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued Booke,
Those Delphicke Lines with deep Impression tooke;
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us Marble with too much conceiving,
And so Sepulcher'd, in such pompe does lie,
That Kings for such a Tombe would wish to die."

JOHN MILTON, 1630, (et seq. 24: the first of his pieces that appeared in print) prefixed to the Second Folio of Shakspeare's Plays, 1632. See Lon. Athen., 1863, l. 222.

Warble his native wood-notes wild"

JOHN MILTON: L'Allegro.

As the sketch of Shakspeare in the Theatrum Poetarum Anglicanorum (1675) of Edward Phillips is ascribed to his illustrious uncle, (see our Life of John Milton, p. 1298, supra,) it should not be omitted in this place.

"William Shakspeare, the glory of the English stage, whose nativity at Stratford-upon-Avon, is the highest honour that town can boast of: from an actor of tragedies and comedies he became a maker, and such a maker, that though some others may perhaps pretend to a more exact decorum and oeconomia, especially in tragedy, never any expressed a more lofty and tragic height; never any represented nature more purely to the life; and where the polishments of art are most wanting, as probably his learning was not extraordinary, he pleaseth with a certain wild and native elegance; and in all his writings hath an unvulgar style, as well in his Venus and Adonis, his Rape of Lucrece, and other various poems, as in his dramatics."

"You, Swans of Avon, change your fates, and all Sing, and then die at Drayton's funeral!
Sure shortly there will not a drop be seen,
And the smooth-pebbled bottom be turned green,
When the Nymphs that inhabit it, have,
As they did Shakspeare, weep to thy grave."

SIR ASTON COKAIN. On Drayton's Death, 1631.

In his Præsludium to Browne's Plays, Sir Aston 20 marks,

"Judicious Beaumont, and th' ingenious soul
Of Fletcher too, may move without controul,

Shakespeare (most rich in humours) entertain
The crowded theatres with his happy vein."
See Cokain's Poems, &c., 1668, sm. 8vo.

"Mellifluous Shakespeare, whose enchanting quill Commanded Mirth or Passion, was but Will."

TWO EPIGRAMMES ON SHAKESPEARE:

118. Thy Muses, sugred dainties seem to us
Like the fam'd Apples of old Tantalus:—
For we (admiring) see and hear thy strains,
But none I see or hear, those sweets attain.
119. Thou hast so us'd thy Pen (or shooke thy speare)
That poets startle, nor thy wit come neare."

"TO THE READER.

This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but haue drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpasse
All that was euer writ in brasse.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.—B I"

RAY JONSON. Lines on Martin Droeshout's

Portrait of Shakespeare in the First Folio, 1623. They are also found, with variations in orthography, typography, &c. in the Second, (1632), Third, (1664), and Fourth (1685) Folios

We must quote a few lines from other eulogies by Ben Jonson:

"To the memory of my beloved,
The AVTHOR

MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE:

To draw no enuy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame.
While I confesse thy writings to be such,
As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage

Soule of the Age!

The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye
A little further, to make thee a roome.
Thou art a Monument, without a tombe,
And art alive still, while thy Booke doth line,
And we haue wits to read, and praise to giue.

Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to shewe,
To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warme
Our eares, or, like a Mercury, to charme!
Nature her selfe was proud of his designs,
And ioyd to weare the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and wouen so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other Wit

Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were,
To see thee in our waters yet appeare,
And make those flights about the banks of Thames
That so did take Eliza, and our Iames
But stay! I see thee in the Hemisphere
Admanc'd, and made a Constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
Or influence, childe, or cheere the drooping Stage,
Which, since thy flight frō hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And despaired day, but for thy Volume's light"

From the First Folio, 1623: an exact copy.

Nor must the prose portrait in Jonson's Discoveries, in which, now approaching the grave, he refers so affectionately to the friend of his youthful days, be forgotten.

"I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honour to Shakespeare that in his writing (whatsoever he penned) he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, 'Would he had blotted a thousand!' which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance who chose that circumstance to commend their friend by wherein he most faulted, and to justify mine own candour: for I loved the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was indeed honest, and of an open and free nature, had an excellent phantasy, brave notions, and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped.

"Suffragandus erat, as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too! Many times he fell into those things could not escape laughter: as when he said, in the person of Cæsar, one speaking to him, 'Cæsar, that dost me wrong!' he replied, 'Cæsar did never wrong but with just cause,' and such like—which were ridiculous. But he redeemed his vices with his virtues. There was ever more in him to be praised than to be pardoned."—Ben Jonson's Discoveries; probably written about 1636.

In a conversation between Sir J. Suckling, Sir W. Davenant, Ben Jonson, and some others, the ever-memorable John Hales is reported to have said that "If Shakespeare had not read the Antients he had not stolen from them; and if he [Jonson] would produce any one topic finely treated by any one of them, he [Hales] would undertake to shew something upon the same subject, at least as well written, by Shakespeare."

Comparisons between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson will be found in our Life of the latter, p. 998, supra.

That the "flights of the Sweet Swan of Avon" charmed the "Elihu" of humble life, we have early evidence. In his enumeration of English poets, Master John Johnson thus discourses of our author:

"There was also Shakespeare, who (as Cupid informed me) creeps into the women's closets about bed-time, and if it were not for some of the old out-of-date grandames (who are set over the rest as their tutoresses) the young sparkish girdles would read in Shakespeare day and night," &c.—The Academy of Love, describing the Folly of Young Men and the Fallacy of Women, 1641, 4to.

Aubrey was not born until nine years after Shakespeare's death, but he talked with the acquaintances of the poet, (see AUBREY, JOHN, p. 82, supra), and left us some of the results of his investigations:

"This William, being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London, I guess, about 18, and was an actor at one of the play-houses, and did act exceedingly well (Now, B Jonson was never a good actor, but an excellent instructor) He began early to make essays at dramatic poetry, which at that time was very low, and his plays took well. He was a handsome, well-shaped man, very good company, and of a very ready and pleasant smooth wit. The humour of a constable in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' he happened to take at Grendon, in Bucks, which is the road from London to Stratford, and there was living that constable about 1642, when I first came to Oxon. Mr Jos Howe is of that parish, and knew him. Ben Jonson and he did gather humours of men daily wherever they came. He was wont to go to his native country once a year. I think I have been told that he left £200 or £300 per annum, there and thereabout, to a sister. I have heard Sir William Davenant and Mr Thomas Shadwell—who is accounted the best comedian we have now—say that he had a most prodigious wit, and did admire his natural parts beyond all other dramatical writers. He was wont to say that he never blotted out a line in his life. Said Ben Jonson, 'I wish he had blotted out a thousand'."—Written about 1670. Letters by Eminent Persons, &c., (1813, 8 vols. 8vo.) iii. 307.

So much for the earlier notices of Shakespeare: we descend to later times.

"Shakespear, who, taught by none, did first impart
To Fletcher wit, to lab'ring Johnson art
He, monarch-like, gave there his subjects law,
And is that nature which they paint and draw;
Fletcher reached that, which on his heights did grow,
While Johnson crept, and gathered all below.
This did his love, and thus his mirth digest,
One imitates him most, the other best
If they have since outwrit all other men,
'Tis from the drops which fell from Shakespear's pen.
The storm which vanished on the neighb'ring shore
Was taught by Shakespear's Tempest first to roar
That innocence and beauty which did smile
In Fletcher, grew in this Inchaned Isle
But Shakespear's magic could not copied be,
Within that circle none durst walk but he"

JOHN DRYDEN. Prologue to the Tempest, altered, 1670

"Shakespeare, thy gift, I place before my sight,
With awe I ask his blessing ere I write,
With reverence look on his majestic face,
Proud to be less, but of his godlike race.
His soul inspires me while thy praise I write,
And I like Teucer under Ajax fight.
Bids thee through me be bold, with dauntless breast
Contemn the bad and emulate the best
Like his, thy critics in th' attempt are lost,
When most they rail, know then they envy most"

JOHN DRYDEN. Epist. to Sir Godfrey Kneller.

"In him we find all arts and sciences, all moral and natural philosophy, without knowing that he ever studied them."—JOHN DRYDEN

"To begin, then, with Shakespeare. He was the man, who, of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul. All the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them, not laboriously, but luckily, when he describes any thing, you more than see it—you feel it, too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned, he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature,—he looked inwards and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike: were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat and insipid, his comic wit degenerating into clenches, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great when some great occasion is presented to him, no man can say he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets, 'Quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi!'

The consideration of this made Mr Hales, of Eton, say that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespeare. and, however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem; and in the last King's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him"—JOHN DRYDEN: Essay on Dramatick Poetry. See, also, Notes and Queries, 1854, i 95.

SHA

This critique elicited the enthusiastic eulogy of a stern censor with whom enthusiasm was rare:

“The account of Shakespeare may stand as a perpetual model of encomiastic criticism; exact without minuteness, and lofty without exaggeration. The praise lavished by Longinus on the attestation of the heroes of Marathon by Demosthenes, fades away before it. In a few lines is exhibited a character so extensive in its comprehension and so curious in its limitations, that nothing can be added, diminished, or reformed; nor can the editors and admirers of Shakespeare, in all their emulation of reverence, boast of much more than of having diffused and paraphrased his epitome of excellence, of having changed Dryden's gold for baser metal, of lower value though of greater bulk.”—DR JOHNSON. Life of Dryden.

See, also, Hallam's Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part 3, chap. vi., Div. 86, n , 87, n.

"Not but the tragic spirit was our own,
And full in Shakespeare, fair in Otway, shone:
But Otway fall'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakespeare scarce effaced a line "

POPE. Imit of Horace, book 11, Epist. 1.

"If ever any author deserved the name of an original, it was Shakespeare. Homer himself drew not his art so immediately from the fountains of nature: it proceeded through Egyptian strainers and channels, and came to him, not without some of those modifications and alterations, which the models of those before him. The poetry of Shakespeare was inspiration indeed: he is not so much an imitator as an instrument of Nature, and it is not so just to say that he speaks from her, as that she speaks through him.

"His characters are so much nature herself, that it is a sort of injury to call them by so distant a name as copies of her. Those of other poets have a constant resemblance, which shows that they received them from one another and were but multipliers of the same image, each picture, like a mock rainbow, is but the reflection of a reflection. But every single character in Shakespeare is as much an individual as those in life itself. It is as impossible to find any two alike; and such as from their relation or affinity in any respect appear most to be twins, will, upon comparison, be found remarkably distinct. To this life and variety of character we must add the wonderful preservation of it, which is such throughout his plays, that had all the speeches been printed without the very names of the persons, I believe one might have applied them with certainty to every speaker.

“The power over our passions was never possessed in a more eminent degree, or displayed in so different instances. Yet, all along, there is seen no labour, no pains to raise them; no preparation to guide or guess to the effect, or be perceived to lead towards it, but the heart swells, and the tears burst out, just at the proper places we are surprised at the moment we weep, and yet, upon reflection, find the passion so just that we should be surprised if we had not wept, and wept at that very moment

“How astonishing is it, again, that the passions directly opposite to these, laughter and spleen, are no less at his command! that he is not more a master of the great than the ridiculous in human nature, of our noblest tendernesses than of our vainest foibles, of our strongest emotions, than of our idlest sensations! Nor does he only excel in the passions, in the coolness of reflection and reasoning he is full as admirable. His sentiments are not only in general the most pertinent and judicious upon every subject, but by a talent very peculiar, something between penetration and felicity, he hits upon that particular point on which the bent of each argument turns, or the force of each motive depends. This is perfectly amazing, from a man of no education or experience in those great and public scenes of life which are the subject of his thoughts, and which he seems to have known the world by intuition to have looked through human nature at our glance, and to be the only author that gives ground for a very new opinion, that the philosopher, and even the man of the world, may be born, as well as the poet. It must be owned, that, with all these great excellences, he has almost as great defects, and that as he has certainly written better, so he has perhaps written worse, than any other.”—ALEX. POPE Pref. to his ed. of Shakespeare, 1725, (q. r.) and compare his remarks on Shakespeare’s learning with Dr Richard Farmer’s Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare, 1766, 8vo.) See, also, Blackw. Mag. liv 148, 383, 385

"I felt that here Shakespeare breathed in his inspiration; here he watched the wild flowers, and learned to embroider his poetry with their amaranthine colours. I fancied I felt whence his poetry was drawn, and recalled Gray's lines on Shakespeare with a clear perception of the fitness of every epithet:

What time, where lucid Avon strayed,
To him the mighty mother did unveil
Her awful face the dauntless child
Stretch'd forth his little hand, and smil'd.
This pencil 'twas,” she said, “ whose colours clear
Richly paint the gates of Paradise;
Thine, too, these golden keys, immortal boy!
This can unlock the gates of Joy,
Of Horror that, and thrilling Fears,
Or open the sacred source of sympathetic Tears.” ”

INSCRIPTION FOR A MONUMENT TO SHAKESPEARE.

O pale misfortune's slaves : O ye who dwell
Unknown with humble quiet ye who wait
In courts, or fill the golden seats of kings .
O sons of sport and pleasure O thou wretch
That weepst for jealous love, or the sore wounds

SELA

Of conscious guilt, or death's rapacious hand,
Which left thee void of hope: O ye who roam
In exile, ye who through the embattled field
Seek bright renown, or who for nobler palms
Contend, the leaders of a public cause,
Approach behold this marble. Know ye not
The features? Hath not oft his faithful tongue
Told you the fashion of your own estate,
The secrets of your bosom? Here, then, round
His monument with reverence while ye stand,
Say to each other, 'This was Shakespeare's form;
Who walked in every path of human life,
Felt every passion; and to all mankind
Doth now, will ever, that experience yield,
Which his own genius only could acquire.'"

A KENSIDE.

“Shakespeare is, above all writers, at least above all modern writers, the poet of nature, the poet that holds up to his readers a faithful mirror of manners and of life. His characters are not modified by the customs of particular places, unpractised by the rest of the world, by the peculiarities of studies or professions, which can operate but upon small numbers, or by the accidents of transient fashions or temporary opinions: they are the genuine progeny of common humanity, such as the world will always supply and observation will always find. His persons act and speak by the influence of those general passions and principles by which all minds are agitated and the whole system of life is continued in motion. In the writings of other poets a character is too often an individual; in those of Shakespeare it is commonly a species.

"It is from this wide extension of design that so much instruction is derived. It is this which fills the plays of Shakespeare with practical axioms and domestic wisdom. It was said of Euripides that every verse was a precept, and it may be said of Shakespeare that from his works may be collected a system of civil and domestic economy. He has not real power, but he has the splendour of particular passages, but, by the progress of his fable and the tenour of his dialogue, and he that tries to recommend him by select quotations will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen.

“It will not easily be imagined how much Shakespeare excels in accommodating his sentiments to real life, but by comparing him with other authors. It was observed of the ancient schools of declamation that the more diligently they were frequented the more was the student disqualified for the world, because he found nothing there which he should ever meet in any other place. The same remark may be applied to every stage but that of Shakespeare. The theatre, when it is under any other direction, is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was never heard, upon topics which will never arise in the commerce of mankind. But the dialogue of this author is often so evidently determined by the incident which produces it, and is pursued with so much ease and simplicity, that it seems scarcely to claim the merit of fiction, but to have been gleaned, by diligent selection, out of common conversation and common occurrences "Upon every other stage the universal agent is love, by whose power all good and evil is distributed, and every action quickened or retarded. To bring a lover, a lady, and a rival into the fable, to entangle them in contradictory obligations, perplex them with oppositions of interest, and harass them with violences of desires inconsistent with each other; to make them meet in rapture and part in agony, to fill their mouths with hyperbolical joy and outrageous sorrow, to distress them as nothing human ever was distressed, to deliver them as nothing human ever was delivered; is the business of a modern dramatist. For this, probability is violated, life is misrepresented, and language is depraved. But love is only one of many passions, and, as it has no great influence upon the sum of life, it has little operation in the dramas of a poet who caught his ideas from the living world, and exhibited only what he saw before him. He knew that any other passion as it was regular or exorbitant was a cause of happiness or calamity.

"Characters thus ample and general were not easily discriminated and preserved; yet perhaps no poet ever kept his personages more distinct from each other. I will not say, with Pope, that every speech may be assigned to the proper speaker, because many speeches, though in the mouths of different characters, are so general, that they may be equally assigned to every person, if it will be difficult to find any that can be properly transferred from the present possessor to another claimant. The choice is right when there is reason for choice."

"Other dramatists can only gain attention by hyperbolic or exaggerated characters, by fabulous and unexampled excellence or depravity, as the writers of barbarous romances invigorated the reader by a giant and a dwarf, and he that should form his expectations of human affairs from the play or from the tale would be equally deceived. Shakespeare has no heroes; his scenes are occupied only by men, who act and speak as the reader thinks he should himself have spoken or acted on the same occasion. Even where the agency is supernatural, the dialogue is level with life. Other writers disguise the most natural passions and most frequent incidents, so that he who contemplates them in the book will not know them in the world. Shakespeare approximates the remote, and familiarizes the wonderful; the event which he represents will not happen, but, if it were possible, its effects would probably be such as he has assigned; and it may be said that he has not only shown human nature as it acts in real exigencies, but as it would be found in trials to which it cannot be exposed.

"This therefore is the praise of Shakespeare, that his drama is the mirror of life; that he who has mased his imagination in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him, may be cured of his delirious extasies, by reading human sentiments in human language, by scenes from which a horrid may estimate the transactions of the world, and a confessor predict the progress of the passions. . . . As his personages act upon principles arising from genuine passion, very little modified by particular forms, their pleasures and vexations are communicable to all times and to all places; they are natural, and therefore durable. The adventitious peculiarities of personal habits are only superficial dyes, bright and pleasing for a little while, yet soon fading to a dim tint, without any remains of former lustre, but the discriminations of true passion are the colours of nature, they pervade the whole mass, and can only perish with the body that exhibits them. The accidental compositions of heterogeneous modes are dissolved by the chance which combined them; but the uniform simplicity of primitive qualities neither admits increase nor suffers decay. The sand heaped by one flood is scattered by another; but the rock always continues in its place. The stream of time, which is continually washing the dissoluble fabrics of other poets, passes without injury by the adamant of Shakespeare."—DR. SAMUEL JOHNSON. Preface to his ed. of Shakespeare, 1765.

The Doctor, however, expresses his opinion that the poet has faults "sufficient to obscure and overwhelm any other merit," and remarks that, whilst "he has scenes of undoubted and perpetual excellence," he has not perhaps "one play which, if it were now exhibited as the work of a contemporary writer, would be heard to the conclusion." But the reader must read the whole of this Preface, and, assenting or dissenting, he will wish it longer; and if he then proceed to the Notes he will probably wish them fewer. We have, however, already considered the Doctor's abilities as a Shakspearian commentator, (JOHNSON, SAMUEL, p. 976, supra.)

In conversation the gruff dictator went so far as to declare that

"Shakespeare never has six lines together without a fault. Perhaps you may find seven; but this does not refute my general assertion"—Croker's Biographical Dictionary, chap. xxii. See, also, the Index to this work, ed. 1848.

The extracts last cited have not put the Shakespeare devotee in the best possible humour for weighing the verdict of David Hume, which follows, but, like Shakespeare, (according to Johnson,) at least in this, we have "no heroes" in this book,—no name too great for juxtaposition with honest (even if erring) censure. It is perhaps some evidence of our honesty that on these pages we continually record judgments against which our own critical convictions earnestly protest.

"Dr. [Edward] Young observed to me that Shakespeare's style, where the hearts and manners of men was the subject, is always good, his bad lines, generally, where the subject is, are concerned"—1758.—Spencer's Poet's Art, Sect. iv, n.

"Among the English [who have introduced fairies, witches, &c.] Shakespeare has incomparably excelled all others. That noble extravagance of fancy which he had in so great perfection thoroughly qualified him to touch this weak, superstitious part of his reader's imagination, and made him capable of succeeding where he had nothing to support him besides the strength of his own genius. There is something so wild, and yet so solemn, in the speeches of his ghosts, fairies, witches, and the like imaginary persons, that we cannot forbear thinking them natural, though we have no rule by which to judge of them, and must confess, if there are such beings in the world, it looks highly probable they should talk and act as he has represented them."—ANDERSON: Spectator, No. 419, July 1, 1712.

"If Shakespeare be considered as a Man," remarks a famous historian, "born in a rude age and educated in the lowest manner, without any instruction, either from the world or from books, he may be regarded as a prodigy if represented as a Poet capable of furnishing a proper entertainment to a refined or intelligent audience, we must abate much of this eulogy. In his compositions, we regret that many irregularities, and even absurdities, should so frequently disfigure the animated and passionate scenes intermixed with them; and at the same time we perhaps admire the more those beauties on account of their being surrounded with such deformities. A striking peculiarity of sentiment, adapted to a single character, he frequently hits as it were by inspiration; but a reasonable propriety of thought he cannot for any time uphold. Nervous and picturesque expressions as well as descriptions abound in him, but it is in vain we look either for purity or simplicity of diction. His total ignorance of all theatrical art and conduct, however material a defect, yet, as it affects the spectator rather than the reader, we can more easily excuse than that want of taste which often prevails in his productions, and which gives way only by intervals to the irradiations of genius. A great and fertile genius he certainly possessed, and one enriched equally with a tragic and comic vein; but he ought to be cited as a proof how dangerous it is to rely on these advantages alone for attaining an excellence in the finer arts. And there may even remain a suspicion that we overrate, if possible, the greatness of his genius, in the same manner as bodies often appear more gigantic on account of their being disproportioned and misshapen."—DAVID HUME: Hist. of Eng., Reign of James I., chap. xlix, Appendix.

A later critic, and one much more at home in this department of letters, thinks very differently:

"The English stage might be considered equally without rule and without model when Shakespeare arose. The effect of the genius of an individual upon the taste of a nation is mighty; but that genius, in its turn, is formed according to the notions prevalent at the period when it comes into existence. Such was the case with Shakespeare. Had he received an education more extensive, and possessed a taste refined by the classical models, it is probable that he also, in admiration of the ancient Drama, might have mistaken the form for the essence, and subscribed to those rules which had produced such masterpieces of art. Fortunately for the full exertion of a genius as comprehensive and versatile as intense and powerful, Shakespeare had no access to any models of which the commanding merit might have controlled and limited his own exertions. He followed the path which a nameless crowd of obscure writers had trodden before him, but he moved in it with the grace and majestic step of a being of a superior order, and vindicated for ever the British theatre from a pedantic restriction to classical rule. Nothing went before Shakespeare which in any respect was fit to fix and stamp the character of a national Drama; and certainly no one will succeed him capable of establishing, by more authority, a form more restricted than that which Shakespeare used."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Essay on the Drama, in Encyc. Brit., and in his Prose Works.

"Shakespeare, whose tragic scenes are sometimes so wonderfully forcible and expressive, is a very indifferent poet when he attempts to rhyme."—HUME: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxii. The Commonwealth.

"Shakespeare, . . . that first genius of the world . . . I hold a perfect comedy to be the perfection of human composition, and I firmly believe that fifty Iliads and Æneids could be written sooner than such a character as Falstaff. . . . Annibal Caracul himself could not paint like our Raphael poet! . . . Was Raphael himself as great a genius in his art as the author of 'Macbeth'? . . . Milton and Shakespeare, the only two mortals I am acquainted with who ventured beyond the visible diurnal sphere and preserved their intellects . . . Shakespeare, who was superior to all mankind, wrote some whole plays that are as bad as any of our present writers [1778]."—HORACE WALPOLE, 1776-1790. Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 394, 396, vii. 135, 373, viii. 160, (see, also, 635,) ix. 254.

"I cannot account for Shakespeare's low estimate of his own writings, except from the sublimity, the super-humanity of his genius. They were infinitely below his conception of what they might have been and ought to have been. The tragedy of Othello, Plato's records of the last scenes of the career of Socrates, and Isaac Walton's Life of George Herbert, are the most pathetic of human compositions."—WILLIAM WORDSWORTH: Memoirs, by C. Wordsworth, D.D.

"There are also many descriptions in the poets and orators which owe their sublimity to a richness and profusion of images, in which the mind is so dazzled as to make it impossible to attend to that exact coherence and agreement of the allusions which we should require on every other occasion. I do not remember a more striking example of this than the description which is given of the king's army in the play of Henry IV.:

'All furnished, all in arms,
All plumed like ostriches that with the wind,' &c.
—EDMUND BURKE: On the Sublime and Beautiful Works, Boston, Little, Brown & Co., 1866, i. 154. This edition, in 12 vols. (cr. 8vo, 1866-67, is the only correct one extant, (1869) more than 3000 errors in the former editions being rectified.

"It is absolutely necessary to recollect that the age in which Shakespeare lived was one of great abilities applied to individual and prudential purposes, and not an age of high moral feeling and lofty principle, which gives a man of genius the power of thinking of all things in reference to all. If, then, we should find that Shakespeare took these materials as they were presented to him, and yet to all effectual purposes produced the same grand result as others attempted to produce in an age so much more favourable, shall we not feel and acknowledge the purity and holiness of genius,—a light which, however it might shine on a dunghill, was as pure as the divine influence which created all the beauty of nature?"—COLERIDGE.

"It is Shakespeare's peculiar excellence that throughout the whole of his splendid picture-gallery (the reader will excuse the acknowledged inadequacy of the metaphor) we find individuality everywhere,—more portrait nowhere. In all his various characters we still feel ourselves communing with the same nature, which is everywhere present as the vegetable sap in the branches, sprays, leaves, buds, blossoms, and fruits, their shapes, tastes, and colours. Speaking of the effect, that is, his works themselves, we may define the excellence of their method as consisting in that just proportion, that union and interpenetration of the universal and the particular, which must ever pervade all works of decided genius and true science!"—S. T. COLERIDGE: The Friend.

"Observe the fine humanity of Shakespeare, in that his sneers are all worthless villains. Too cunning to attach value to self-praise, and unable to obtain approval from those whom they are compelled to respect, they propitiate their own self-love by disparaging and lowering others."—COLERIDGE: Letters, etc., 3d ed., 1864, 244.

"Indeed, it may be taken once for all as the truth, that Shakespeare, in the absolute universality of his genius, always reverences whatever arises out of our moral nature, he never profanes his muse with a contemptuous reasoning away of the genuine and general, however unaccountable, feelings of mankind."—COLERIDGE: Literary Remains, ii. 174.

"I wonder that the great master who knew every thing, when he called Sleep the death of each day's life, did not call Dreams the insanity of each day's sanity."—CHARLES DICKENS: The Uncommercial Traveller: Night-Walks.

"For I look upon him [Shakespeare] to be the worst of models, though the most extraordinary of writers."—LOUIS BYRON.

"I am always happy to meet persons who perceive the transcendent superiority of Shakespeare over all other writers."—R. W. EMERSON: Conduct of Life: Culture, (1860.)

"I care not how Shakespeare is acted: with him the thought suffices."—PRESIDENT ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

"The value of any work of art is to be tested rather by its effect as a whole than by the effect of particular parts. And this especially applies to a work of dramatic art, for parts even fine in themselves may, with reference to the entire effect of a drama, be blameworthy instead of beautiful. No writer that ever lived has approached Shakspeare in the skill by which the whole is made to produce its entire and undisturbed effect. He is, thus, of all poets, the least to be appreciated from the study alone of 'specimens.' For although these may be sufficient to place him in the highest rank, in comparison with the 'specimens' of other writers, yet, separated from the parts by which they are naturally surrounded, they furnish no idea of the extraordinary harmony with which they are blended with all that has preceded and all that follows them. Shakspeare, beyond every other dramatic writer, possesses the power of sustaining a continuous idea, which imparts its own organization and vitality to the most complete and apparently incongruous action,—to the most diversified and seemingly isolated characters."—CHARLES KNIGHT. Shakspeare, Pictorial ed., 2d ed., 1867, iv 474

De Quincey, who styles Shakspeare "the protagonist on the great arena of modern poetry, and the glory of the human intellect," has some lines of strength and beauty on his illustrious subject, for a few of which we must find room:

"In the gravest sense it may be affirmed of Shakspeare, that he is among the modern luxuries of life, that life, in fact, is a new thing, and one more to be coveted, since Shakspeare has extended the domains of human consciousness, and pushed its dark frontiers into regions not so much as dimly described or even suspected before his time, far less illuminated (as now they are) by beauty and tropical luxuriance of life. For instance,—a single instance, indeed, one which in itself is a world of new revelation,—the possible beauty of the female character had not been seen as in a dream before Shakspeare called into perfect life the radiant shapes of Desdemona, of Imogene, of Hermione, of Perdita, of Ophelia, of Miranda, and many others. The Una of Spenser, earlier by ten or fifteen years than most of these, was an idealized portrait of female innocence and virgin purity, but too shadowy and unreal for a dramatic reality. And as to the Grecian classics, let not the reader imagine for an instant that any prototype in this field of Shaksperian power can be looked for there. In Shakspeare all is presented in the concrete, that is to say, not brought forward in relief, or by some effort of an anatomical artist, but embodied and imbedded, so to speak, as by the force of a creative nature, in the complex system of a human life, a life in which all the elements move and play simultaneously, and with something more than mere simultaneity or co-existence, acting and reacting each upon the other, nay, even acting by each other and through each other. In Shakspeare's characters is felt forever a real organic life, where each is for the whole and in the whole, and where the whole is for each and in each. They only are real incarnations.

From his works alone might be gathered a golden bead-roll of thoughts the deepest, subtlest, most pathetic, and yet most catholic and universally intelligible, the most characteristic also, and appropriate to the particular person, the situation, and the case, yet, at the same time, applicable to the circumstances of every human being, under all the accidents of life and all vicissitudes of fortune."—De Quincey's Life of Shakspeare, in Encyc Brit, repub. in his Biog Essays. See Lon Quar Rev, lxx 62

Mr. De Quincey remarks (ubi supra) that it is "the prerogative of Shakspeare to have thought more finely and more extensively than all other poets combined," again, (Literary Romances: William Godwin,) that "few men would disagree in making Shakspeare the first of human intellects."

"O mighty poet! Thy works are not, as those of other men, simply and merely great works of art, but are also like the phenomena of nature,—like the sun and the sea, the stars and the flowers, like frost and snow, hail and dew, hail-storm and thunder,—which are to be studied with entire sublimation of our own faculties, and in the perfect faith that in them there can be no too much or too little, nothing useless or inert, but that the further we press in our discoveries the more we shall see proofs of design and self-supporting arrangement where the careless eye had seen nothing but accident."—De Quincey's The Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth.

"The striking peculiarity of Shakspeare's mind was its generic quality, its power of communication with all other minds, so that it contained a universe of thought and feeling within itself, and had no one peculiar bias, or exclusive excellence, more than another. He was just like any other man, but that he was like all other men. He was the least of an egotist that it was possible to be. He was nothing in himself; but he was all that others were or that they could become. He not only had in himself the germs of every faculty and feeling, but he could follow them by anticipation, intuitively, into all their conceivable ramifications, through every change of fortune, or conflict of passion, or turn of thought. He 'had a mind reflecting ages past' and present all the people that ever lived are there. There was no respect of persons with him. His genius shone equally on the evil and on the good, on the wise and the foolish, the monarch and the beggar. 'All corners of the earth, kings, queens, and states, maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave' are hardly hid from his searching glance. He was like the genius of humanity, changing places with all of us at pleasure and playing with our purposes as with his own. He turned 'the globe round for his amusement, and surveyed the generations of men, and the individuals, as they passed, with their different concerns, passions, follies, vices, virtues, actions, and motives—was well those that they knew as those which they did not know or acknowledge to themselves. The dreams of childhood, the ravings of despair, were the toys of his fancy. Airy beings waited at his call, and came at his bidding. Harmless fairies nodded to him and did him courtesies; and the night-hag bestrode the blast at the command of 'his so potent art.' The world of spirits lay open to him, like the world of real men and women; and there is the same truth in his delineations of the one as of the other; for, if the preternatural characters he describes could be supposed to exist, they would speak, and feel, and act, as he makes them."—WILLIAM HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Poets, Lect. III., On Shakspeare and Milton. "The over-informing power of Shakspeare, whose eye, watching alike the minutest traces of character and the strongest movements of passion, 'glances from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven,' and, with the lambent flame of genius playing round each object, lights up the universe in a robe of its own radiance."—HAZLITT Spirit of the Age: Sir Walter Scott.

II.; and Table-Talk, Essay XIX., (Sir Walter Scott, Racine, and Shakspeare,) Characters of Shakspeare's Plays, 1817, 8vo; 4th ed., ed. by his Son, 1848, 12mo.

The first edition of Hazlitt's Characters of Shakspeare's Plays was reviewed by Lord Jeffrey in the Edinburgh Review for August, 1817; and from this critical paper, repub. in Jeffrey's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., we give some extracts.

"In many points, however, [he [Hazlitt]] acquitted himself excellently, partly in the development of the principal characters with which Shakspeare has peopled the fancies of all English readers, but principally, we think, in the delicate sensibility with which he has traced and the natural eloquence with which he has pointed out that fond familiarity with beautiful forms and images—that eternal recurrence to what is sweet or majestic in the simple aspects of nature—that indestructible love of flowers and odours, and dews and clear waters, and soft airs and sounds, and bright skies, and woodland solitudes, and moonlight bowers, which are the Material elements of Poetry—and that fine sense of their undefined relation to mental emotion, which is its essence and vivifying Soul—and which, in the midst of Shakspeare's most busy and atrocious scenes, falls like gleams of sunshine on rocks and ruins—contrasting with all that is rugged and repulsive, and reminding us of the existence of purer and brighter elements, which HE ALONE has poured out from the richness of his own mind, without effort or restraint, and contrived to intermingle with the play of all the passions, and the vulgar course of this world's affairs, without deserting for an instant the proper business of the scene, or appearing to pause or digress, from love of ornament or need of repose! HE ALONE, who, when the object requires it, is always keen and worldly and practical—and who yet, without changing his hand or stopping his course, scatters around him, as he goes, all sounds and shapes of sweetness, and conjures up landscapes of immortal fragrance and freshness, and peoples them with spirits of glorious sweet and attractive grace—and is a thousand times more full of fancy, and imagery, and splendor, than those who, in pursuit of such endearments, have shrunk back from the delineation of character or passion, and declined the discussion of human duties and cares. More full of wisdom and ridicule and sagacity than all the moralists and satirists that ever existed, he is more wild, airy, and inventive, and more pathetic and fantastic, than all the poets of all regions and ages of the world, and has all those elements so happily mixed up in him, and bears his high faculties so temperately, that the most severe reader cannot complain of him for want of strength or of reason, nor the most sensitive, for defect of ornament or inequality. Every thing in him is in unmeasured abundance and unguessed perfection, but every thing so balanced and kept in subordination as not to jostle or disturb or take the place of another. The most exquisite poetical conceptions, images, and descriptions, are given with such brevity, and introduced with such skill, as merely to adorn, without loading, the scenes they accompany. Although his sails are purple and perfumed, and his prow of beaten gold, they waft him on his voyage not less, but more, rapidly and directly than if they had been composed of baser materials. All his excellences, like those of Nature herself, are thrown out together, and, instead of interfering with, support and recommend each other. His flowers are not tied up in garlands, nor his fruits crushed into baskets, but spring living from the soil, in all the dew and freshness of youth, while the graceful foliage in which they lurk, and the ample branches, the rough and vigorous stem, and the wide-spreading roots on which they depend, are present along with them, and share, in their places, the equal care of their creator."

Something of his lordship's on the other side of the question will be found in the Edinburgh Review, Aug. 1811, 287. See, also, his remarks in the same periodical, xxxvi. 52, 415.

"Shakspeare is of no age. He speaks a language which thrills in our blood in spite of the separation of two hundred years. His thoughts, passions, feelings, strains of fancy, all are of this day, as they were of his own; and his genius may be contemporary with the mind of every generation for a thousand years to come. He, above all poets, looked upon men and lived for mankind. His genius, universal in intellect and sympathy, could find in no more bounded circumference its proper sphere. It could not bear exclusion from any part of human existence. Whatever in nature and life was given to man, was given in contemplation and poetry to him also, and over the undimmed mirror of his mind passed all the shades of our mortal world. Look through all his plays, and tell what form of existence, what quality of spirit, he is most skilful to delineate! Which of al.

the manifold beings he has drawn, lives before our thoughts, our eyes, in most unpictured reality? Is it Othello, Shylock, Falstaff, Lear, the Wife of Macbeth, Imogen, Hamlet, Ariel? In none of the other great dramatists do we see any thing like a perfected art. In their works, every thing, it is true, exists, in some shape or other, which can be required in a drama taking for its interest the absolute interest of human life and nature; but, after all, may not the very best of their works be looked on as sublime masses of chaotic confusion, through which the elements of our moral being appear? It was Shakespeare, the most unlearned of all our writers, who first exhibited on the stage perfect models, perfect images, of all human characters and of all human events. We cannot conceive any skill that could from his great characters remove any defect, or add to their perfect composition. Except in him, we look in vain for the entire fulness, the self-consistency and self-completeness, of perfect art. All the rest of our drama may be regarded rather as a testimony of the state of genius—of the state of mind of the country, full of great practical disposition, and great tragic capacity and power—than as a collection of the works of an art. Of Shakespeare and Homer alone it may be averred that we miss in them nothing of the greatness of nature. In all other poets we do, we feel the measure of their power, and the restraint under which it is held, but in Shakespeare and in Homer all is free and unbounded as in nature, and as we travel along with them, in a car drawn by celestial steeds, our view seems ever interminable as before, and still equally far from off the glorious horizon.—PROF. JOHN WILSON Works, vii 1867, 420, (see, also, 102, 398, 399,) from Blackw Mag, May, 1819.

"The name of Shakespeare is the greatest in our literature—it is the greatest in all literature. No man ever came near to him in the creative powers of the mind, no man had ever such strength at once and such variety of imagination. Coleridge has most felicitously applied to him a Greek epithet, given before to I know not whom, certainly none so deserving of it,—ἀνυπόβουτος, the thousand-souled Shakespeare. The number of characters in his plays is astonishingly great, without reckoning those who, although transient, have often their individuality all distinct, all types of human life in well-defined differences. Yet he never takes an abstract quality to embody it, scarcely perhaps a definite condition of manners, as Jonson does, nor did he draw much, as I conceive, from living models: there is no manifest appearance of personal caricature in his comedies, though in some slight traits of character this may not improbably have been the case. Above all, neither he nor his contemporaries wrote for the stage in the worst, though most literal, and of late years the most usual, sense, making the servants and handmaids of dramatic invention to lord over it, and limiting the capacities of the poet's mind to those of the performers. If this poverty of the representative department of the drama had hung like an incubent fiend on the creative power of Shakespeare, how would he have poured forth with such inexhaustible prodigality the vast diversity of characters that we find in some of his plays? This is it in which he leaves far behind not the dramatists alone, but all writers of fiction. Compare with him Homer, the tragedians of Greece, the poets of Italy, Plautus, Cervantes, Molière, Addison, Le Sage, Fielding, Richardson, Scott, the romancers of the elder or later schools—one man has far more than surpassed them all. Others may have been as sublime, others may have been more pathetic, others may have equalled him in grace and purity of language, and have shunned some of its faults; but the philosophy of Shakespeare, his intimate searching out of the human heart, whether in the gnomic form of sentence or in the dramatic exhibition of character, is a gift peculiarly his own."—HALLAM Introduc. to the Lit. of Europe, Part 3, chap vi; and see Index.

"The works of Shakespeare are miracles of art. In a piece which may be read alone in three hours, we see a character gradually unfold all its recesses to us. We see it change with the change of circumstances. The petulant youth rises into the politic and warlike sovereign. The profuse and courteous philanthropist soars into a hater and scorner of his kind. The tyrant is altered, by the chastening of affliction, into a pensive moralist. The veteran general, distinguished by coolness, sagacity, and self-command, sinks under a conflict between love strong as death and jealousy cruel as the grave. The brave and loyal subject passes step by step to the extremities of human depravity. We trace his progress from the first dawnings of unlawful ambition to the cynical melancholy of his impenitent remorse. Yet in these pieces there are no unnatural transitions. Nothing is omitted, nothing is crowded. Great as are the changes, narrow as is the compass within which they are exhibited, they shock us as little as the gradual alterations of those familiar faces we see every evening and every morning. The magical skill of the poet resembles that of the Dervise in the Spectator, who condensed all the events of seven years into the single moment during which the king held his head under the water. . . . Dryden truly said that 'Shakespeare's magic could not coped be.

Within 'that circle none durst walk but he.'

LOUIS MACAULAY Essays: John Dryden.

His lordship ascribes to Shakespeare "supreme and universal excellence;" pronounces him "the greatest of poets," (on Mitford's Greece); the Prince of Poets, (on Milton); "the greatest poet that ever lived," (on John Dryden); declares that he "has had neither equal nor second," (on Madame D'Arbly), and considers Othello "perhaps the greatest work in the world," (on the Principal Italian Writers.) See, also, his reviews of Moore's Life of Byron, and Croker's Boswell's Johnson.

It is the testimony of another eminent critic that "Shakespeare has transcendent excellence of every sort, and for every critic,—except those who are repelled by the faults which usually attend sublime virtues,—character and manners, morality and prudence, as well as imagery and passion."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH. Edin. Rev., xxii. 34.

Again, in conversation with our late countryman, Alexander H. Everett, he remarked,

"Shakespeare's great superiority over other writers consists in his deep knowledge of human nature. Châteaubriand says of him, 'Il a souvent des mots terribles.' It has been thought by some that those observations upon human nature which appear so profound and remarkable, may, after all, be nearest to the surface, and be taken up most naturally by the early writers in every language, but we do not find them in Homer. Homer is the finest ballad-writer in any language. The flow and fullness of his style is beautiful, but he has nothing of the deep piercing observation of Shakespeare."—N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. 445.

"Shakespeare was, and is, beyond all comparison, the greatest Poet that the world has ever seen. He is greatest in general power, and greatest in style, which is a symbol or evidence of power. . . . He was not a mere poet in the vulgar sense of the term. . . . On the contrary, he was a man eminently acute, logical, philosophical. His reasoning faculty was on a par with his imagination, and pervaded all his works as completely. We hold him to have been not one, but legion, and we think that in all the cases where critics have attempted to distinguish him by any one particular excellence of intellect, they have failed. His great merit, as it appears to us, is that he had no peculiar, no prominent merit: his mind was so well constituted, so justly and admirably balanced, that it had nothing in excess."—BARRY CORNWALL Preface to his edition of the Works of Ben Jonson, 1838, &c., p. 8vo.

We may be charged with needlessly multiplying quotations, (yet "what are these among so many?") but to prove by the testimony of those who have ranged over the literature of all languages that the English bard is not only a great poet, but the greatest of all poets, will not, we are persuaded, be a thankless office. And shall we not claim the second greatest bard also?

"A great poet," says La Harpe, "represents a great portion of the human race. Nature delegated to Shakespeare the interests and direction of the whole to Milton a smaller part, but with plenary power over it, and she bestowed on him such fervour and majesty of eloquence as on no other mortal in any age. . . . A rib of Shakespeare would have made a Milton the same portion of Milton, all poets born ever since."

See, also, MILTON, JOHN, p. 1320, supra.

"All the faults that ever were committed in poetry would be but as air to earth if we could weigh them against one single thought or image such as almost every scene exhibits in every drama of his unrivalled genius."—LANDOR Imaginary Conversations, (Southey.)

"In poetry there is but one supreme,
Though there are many angels round his throne,
Mighty and beautiful, while his face is hid"—LANDOR.

"SHAKESPEARE IN ITALY"

Beyond our shores, beyond the Apennines,
Shakespeare, from heaven came thy creative breath!
Mid citron grove and overarching vines
Thy genius wept at Desdemona's death.
In the proud sire thou bade'st anger cease,
And Juliet by her Romeo sleep in peace.
Then rose thy voice above the stormy sea,
And Ariel flew from Prospero to thee."—W. S. LANDOR, Ju., 1, 1860 Atlantic Monthly, May, 1866, 549. Last Days of Walter Savage Landor, (by Miss Kate Field.) Continued in No. for June, 1866, where (p. 701) Landor is cited as calling "Shakespeare the wisest of men, and as the greatest of poets."

"I have read and studied our great dramatist for nearly half a century; and if I could read and study him for half a century more, I should yet be far from arriving at an accurate knowledge of his works, or an adequate appreciation of his worth. He is an author whom no man can read enough, nor study enough."—J. PAYNE COLLIER Notes and Emendations to the Text of Shakespeare's Plays, &c., 1853, Introduction.

"Make," says Bishop Watson, "Bacon, then, and Locke—and why should I not add that sweet child of nature, Shakespeare?—your chief companions through life, let them be ever upon your table, and, when you have an hour to spare, spend it upon them; and I will answer for their giving you entertainment and instruction as long as you live."

We like these clerical testimonies to the value of the poetry, philosophy, and wisdom of the greatest of all poets, philosophers, and sages: let us adduce one or two more of such from the many on record. A profound teacher of one of the "straitest of all the sects" into which a large portion of the modern religious world is divided, thus counsels "the man who would preach theology successfully."

"Let him not deem it a profanation of his sacred vocation to be familiar with the Bard of Avon, that man who seemed to look into the very soul itself, and see how it would act and speak in any situation of life, who drew his characters not from his knowledge of what had been, but from his intuitive perception of what would be if human beings should be placed in certain circumstances, that man who, 'with no systematic knowledge or scholastic study, comprehended all the powers and uses of the English language so as to speak as no unlearned man ever spoke, who understood all the springs of human motives, and entered into every human character, male and female, English

Roman, Africa, a Danish, and Venetian, and put it on as though it were his own, and who could feel and speak as a king or a clown, the orator or the sage, the lover, the politician, the glutton, hoary age, and the little child, (Biblio Sacra, ii. p. 692,) and who seemed to be familiar with every human being that ever has lived, and to know what any one would do who ever would live."—REV ALBERT BARNES: The Relation of Theology to Preaching: Essays and Reviews, 1855, ii. 86

"Those marvellous works that have placed him in creative genius at the head of the race, . . . Hamlet, Lear, and The Tempest, . . . those wonderful creations of genius."—Ibid.: Presby. Quar. Rev., July, 1826, ix. The Readjustment of Christianity.

"Dr. Chalmers," remarks his biographer, "within the last two or three years of his life, completed an entire perusal of Gibbon, Shakspeare, and Milton. The single play of Shakspeare's in which he took most delight was 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' among the fairy pictures of which he delighted to revel. 'I look,' he would say after laying down the book, 'I look on Shakspeare as an intellectual miracle!'"

Archbishop Sharp advised all young divines to unite the reading of Shakspeare to the study of the Bible, and declared that these two books had made him Archbishop of York; and Mr. Speaker Onslow, who tells us this anecdote, adds,

"His wonderful knowledge of human nature, the dignity and nobleness of his sentiments, and the amazing force and brightness of his expression, do indeed make Shakspeare to be a great pattern for the gravest and most solemn compositions."—Burnet's Own Times, 2d ed., 1833, iii. 107.

"I doubt whether Shakspeare ever had any thought at all of making his personages speak characteristically. In most instances, I conceive,—probably in all,—he drew characters correctly because he could not avoid it, and would never have attained, in that department, such excellence as he has, if he had made any studied efforts for it. And the same, probably, may be said of Homer, and of those other writers who have excelled the most in delineating characters. Shakspeare's peculiar genius consisted chiefly, I conceive, in his forming the same distinct and consistent ideas of an imaginary person that an ordinary man forms of a real and well-known individual. We usually conjecture pretty accurately, concerning a very intimate acquaintance, how he would speak or act on any supposed occasion, if any one should report to us his having done or said something quite out of character, we should at once be struck with the inconsistency, and we often represent to ourselves, and describe to others, without any conscious effort, not only the substance of what he would have been likely to say, but even his characteristic phrases and looks. Shakspeare could no more have endured an expression from the lips of Macbeth inconsistent with the character originally conceived, than an ordinary man could attribute to his most respectable acquaintance the behaviour of a ruffian, or to a human being the voice of a bird, or to a European the features and hue of a negro. Merely from the vividness of the original conception, characteristic conduct and language spontaneously suggested themselves to the great dramatist's pen. He called his personages into being, and left them, as it were, to speak and act for themselves. . . . Slender, and Shallow, and Aguecheek, as Shakspeare has painted them though equally fools, resemble one another no more than Richard, and Macbeth, and Julius Cæsar. . . . The first of dramatists, who might have been perhaps the first of orators, has offered some excellent exemplifications of this rule, [the use of an oblique description,] especially in the speech of Antony over Cæsar's body."—ARCHBISHOP WHATELY: Hacon's Essays.

"If I preach about Shakspeare, and the method of treatment should be somewhat unusual in your ear, I hope you will remember that this is the very thing which I am set to do. Why, then, I would ask, have we just cause to celebrate with a jubilee the fact that three hundred years ago Shakspeare was born; or, in other words, why do we thank God that such a man has been among us? What is there we have read in his writings to render them an enduring benefit to us,—a possession forever,—such as we feel makes us richer, wiser, and, using it aright, better than we should have been without them? It is this question which we propose to discuss. Those who mould a nation's life should be men acquainted with God's scheme of the universe, cheerfully working in their own appointed sphere the work which has been assigned them, accepting God's world because it is His, with all its strange riddles and infinite perplexities, with all the burdens which it lays upon each one of us—not fiercely dashing and shaking themselves like imprisoned birds against the bars of their prison-house, or moodily nourishing in their own hearts, and in the hearts of others, thoughts of discontent, revolt, and despair. Such a poet, I am bold to affirm, we possessed in Shakspeare."—ARCHBISHOP TRENCH: Sermon, Tercentenary of Shakspeare, Stratford-upon-Avon, April 23, 1864.

"Presumptuous as the endeavour may appear to classify, there would seem to be a few great tragedies which occupy summits of their own,—Macbeth, Hamlet, Lear, Othello. . . . I feel indeed tempted to upbraid myself when I think of all the outlying realms of strength and comeliness which I thus seem to leave outside the stately forms of Roman heroes;—the chivalry marshalled around our Plantagenet Kings;—the wit of Mercutio, Beatrice, and Falstaff;—the maiden grace of Imogen and Miranda, Ariel the dainty sprite; Oberon and his elfin Court; the memories which people the glades of the Ardennes; the Rialto of Venice; giving to each glorious scene and sunny shore a stronger lien upon our associations than is possessed even by their own native land."—EARL OF CARLISLE: Address, Tercentenary of Shakspeare, ut supra.

The speculative Scotchman who interpreted the wisdom of the Schools to modern academics pronounces Shakspeare "the greatest observer of human nature," (Sir William Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, No. XXXIII.,) the brilliant Englishman who loved to dissect the faculties of the mind, as the anatomist classifies the muscles and arteries of the frame, styles Shakspeare "the most august of human intellects," (De Quincey's Life of Shakspeare,) and the practical American, who had long compared the page of the poet with the actions of man, refers to Shakspeare as "the great master of the maxims of life and conduct," (Works of Daniel Webster, 1851, i. 174.) Of foreign opinions upon Shakspeare we had intended to quote a number,—Voltaire, Chateaubriand, Ulrici, Guizot, Gothe, and Schlegel; but we have lingered too long in England to admit of this, and our visit to the continent must be necessarily brief.

"The first foreigner whose vision was keen enough to see beyond the mists of prejudice and pedantry, who could discern the eternal principles of art under every variety of form, and who had the glory of proclaiming Shakspeare to be the greatest dramatist the world had ever seen, was Gottlob Ephraim Lessing."—Edin. Rev., July, 1849, 61.

"We discoursed upon English literature, on the greatness of Shakspeare, and on the unfavourable position held by all English dramatic authors who have appeared after that poetical giant. 'A dramatic talent of any importance,' said Gothe, 'could not forbear to notice Shakspeare's works, nay, could not forbear to study them. Having studied them, he must be aware that Shakspeare has already exhausted the whole of human nature in all its tendencies, in all its heights and depths, and that, in fact, there remains for him, the after-comer, nothing more to do. And how could one get courage to put pen to paper, if one were conscious, in an earnest appreciating spirit, that such unfathomable and unattainable excellences were already in existence? It fared better with me fifty years ago in my own dear Germany. I could soon come to an end with all that then existed, it could not long awe me, or occupy my attention. I soon left behind me German literature, and the study of it, and turned my thoughts to life and to production. So on and on I went, in my own natural development, and on and on I fashioned the productions of epoch after epoch. And, at every stage of life and development, my standard of excellence was not much higher than what at such a step I was able to attain. But had I been born an Englishman, and had all those numerous masterpieces been brought before me in all their power at my first dawn of youthful consciousness, they would have overpowered me, and I should not have known what to do. I could not have gone on with such fresh light-heartedness, but should have had to bethink myself, and look about for a long time 'to find some new outlet.'"—Eckermann's Conversations with Gothe, i. 114, 115; see Macdon's Essays, Blog and Crit, 1856, 25.

"Shakspeare is the pride of his nation. A late poet has, with propriety, called him 'the genius of the British isles.' He was the idol of his contemporaries during the interval indeed of puritanical fanaticism which broke out in the next generation and rigorously proscribed all liberal arts and literature, and during the reign of the Second Charles, when his works were either not acted at all, or, if so, very much changed and disfigured, his fame was a while obscured, only to shine forth again, about the beginning of the last century, with more than its original brightness, and since then it has but increased in lustre with the course of time; and for centuries to come (I speak it with the greatest confidence) it will, like an Alpine avalanche, continue to gather strength at every moment of its progress. Of the future extension of his fame, the enthusiasm with which he was naturalized in Germany the moment that he was known, is a significant earnest. . . . Shakspeare's knowledge of mankind has become proverbial. In this his superiority is so great that he has justly been called the master of the human heart. A readiness to remark the mind's fainter and involuntary utterances, and the power to express with certainty the meaning of these signs, as determined by experience and reflection, constitutes 'the observer of men,' but tacitly to draw from these still further conclusions, and to arrange the separate observations according to grounds of probability, into a just and valid combination,—this, it may be said, is to know men. . . . Never perhaps was there so comprehensive a talent for characterization as Shakspeare's. It not only grasps every diversity of rank, age, and sex, down to the slappings of infancy; not only do the king and the beggar, the hero and the pickpocket, the sage and the idiot, speak and act with equal truthfulness; not only does he transport himself to distant ages and foreign nations, and portray with the greatest accuracy (a few apparent violations of costume excepted) the spirit of the ancient Romans, of the French in the wars with the English, of the English themselves during a great part of their history, of the Southern Europeans, (in the serious part of many comedies,) the cultivated society of the day, and the rude barbarism of a Norman fore-time, his human characters have not only such depth and individuality that they do not admit of being classed under common names, and are inexhaustible even in conception, no, this Prometheus not merely forms men, he opens the gates of the magical world of spirits, calls up the midnight ghost, exhibits before us the witches with their unhallowed rites, peoples the air with sportive fairies and sylphs; and these beings, though existing only in the imagination, nevertheless possess such truth and consistency, that even with such misshapen abortions as Caliban he extorts the assenting conviction that were there a ich being they would so conduct themselves. In a word, as Le carries a bold and pregnant fancy into the kingdom of nature, on the other hand he carries nature into the regions of fancy which lie beyond the confines of reality. We are lost in astonishment at the close intimacy he brings us into with the extraordinary, the wonderful, and the unheard-of. . . . If Shakspeare deserves our admiration for his characters, he is equally deserving of it his exhibition of passion, taking this word in its widest significance, as including every mental condition, every tone from indifference or familiar mirth to the wildest rage and despair. He gives us the history of minds; he lays open to us, in a single word, a whole series of their anterior states. His passions do not stand at the same height from first to last, as in the case with so many tragic poets, who, in the language of Lessing, are thorough masters of the legal style of love. He paints, with inimitable veracity, the gradual advance from the first origin; 'he gives,' as Lessing says, 'a living picture of all the slight and secret artifices by which a feeling steals into our souls, of all the imperceptible advantages which it there gains of all the stratagems by which it makes every other passion subservient to itself, till it becomes the sole tyrant of our desires and of our aversions.' Of all the poets, perhaps he alone has portrayed the mental diseases, melancholy, delirium, lunacy, with such inexpressible and, in every respect, definite truth, that the physician may enrich his observations from them in the same manner as from real cases. . . . And this tragical Titan, who storms the heavens and threatens to tear the world from its hinges; who, more terrible than Æschylus, makes our hair to stand on end, and congeals our blood with horror, possessed at the same time the insinuating loveliness of the sweetest poetry; he toys with love like a child, and his songs die away on the ear like melting sighs. He unites in his soul the utmost elevation and the utmost depth; and the most opposite and even apparently irreconcilable properties subsist in him peacefully together. The world of spirits and nature have laid all their treasures at his feet. In strength a demi-god, in profundity of view a prophet, in all-seeing wisdom a guardian spirit of a higher order, he lowers himself to mortals, as if unconscious of his superiority, and is as open and unassuming as a child. . . . Shakespeare's comic talent is equally wonderful with that which he has shown in the pathetic and tragic: it stands on an equal elevation, and possesses equal extent and profundity, in all that I have hitherto said, I only wished to guard against admitting that the former preponderated. He is highly inventive in comic situations and motives, it will be hardly possible to show whence he has taken any of them, whereas, in the serious parts of his dramas, he has generally laid hold of some well-known story. His comic characterization is equally true, various, and profound with his serious. So little is he disposed to caricature, that rather, it may be said, many of his traits are almost too nice and delicate for the stage, and that they can only be made available by a gross actor and fully understood by a cultivated audience. Not only has he delineated many kinds of folly, but even of short stupidity he has contrived to give a most diverting and entertaining picture. . . . The whole of Shakespeare's productions bear the certain stamp of his original genius; but yet no writer was ever farther removed from every thing like a mannerism derived from habit or personal peculiarities. Rather is he, such is the diversity of tone and colour, which varies according to the quality of subjects he assumes, a very Proteus. Each of his compositions is like a world of its own, moving in its own sphere. They are like works of art, finished in one pervading style, which reveals the freedom and judicious choice of their author. If the formation of a work throughout, even in its minutest parts, in conformity with a leading idea, if the domination of one animating spirit over all the means of execution, deserves the name of correctness, (and this, excepting in matters of grammar, is the only proper sense of the term;) we shall then, after allowing to Shakespeare all the higher qualities which demand our admiration, be also compelled, in most cases, to concede to him the title of a correct poet."—AUGUST WILHELM VON SCHLEGEL, Lects on Dramat Art and Lit. (delivered in 1808), Lects XXII, XXIII, Black's trans, ed 1846, 345, 361, 363, 364, 368, 371, 378.

“ Ever since I have been able to think and feel, I have recognized Shakespeare as the first among all poets, the richest and deepest, the most instructive and delightful, the most mysterious and the clearest, and to whom I devoted myself with ever new reverence and love . . . In Shakespeare, poetry, virtue, truth, life, and history is altogether one he is therefore not only a great poet in the usual sense of the word, but also for every thinking being an instructive author, the best expounder of the scriptural text, ‘ the earth is the Lord’s and the Lord’s’ . . . ” — FRANK HORN: Shakespeare's Schauplaue Bräutert, 1822, Praelices, vii. —

"In one word this unparalleled gigantic spirit, like the Indian Brahma, readily takes on him divers incarnations, of which none ~~perhaps~~ may succeed in imbibing and reflecting all his fulness and splendour . The incomparable Briton is not generally to be read as we read Kotzebue or Clausen; whoever approaches him must first of all be prepared to be astonished at the commanding spirit that stands before him, who requires attentive cor-deration, and even a self-collectedness " JULIUS KÖNIGER, of Schneberg: Translation of Shakespeare into German

"When we together enjoyed ourselves with a kind of religious ecstasy over the greatest of all poetical geniuses that ever has been, or ever will be."

beal, or the distinction the value of Shakespearean criticism, the distinction between its relative and comparative 'importance' is too often lost sight of. Relatively to the text it is the most important study in English literature, viewed comparatively with that text, it sinks into insignificance. I would not surrender the little Induction to the Taming of the Shrew in exchange for all the essays, prefaces, and fustian, of all Shakespearean criticism. The Induction has the trustworthiness of single line in Shakespeare is worth the best volumes of any English writer.

"The true secret of the dislike in some quarters to Shakespeare Commentary is, I believe, to be found in the baseless fancy that the critics seek an alliance in the matter of fame with his im-
